[vatopid=269]

Current pricing of LTC is $110. ATH was $410 in May 2021 (10 months ago).

Basically LTC continues to maintain a good market position as a usable crypto due to fast transaction speeds and nearly zero fees.

Looking at comparative pricing levels against Bitcoin you can see that it's just 25% of the ATH whereas BTC is 60% of theirs. That means if both cryptos reach new ATH's in the coming months or next year that Litecoin will be the better investment return.

I continue to see strong usage of Litecoin with HF members. It's easily the 2nd most popular payment crypto. Almost no one uses Ethereum. Bitcoin fees continue to be questionable. We could be two years away still from ETH 2.0 (fixing their fee problem).

Just saying to you that if you want to grab some LTC at $110 a pop this is a reasonable moment. I'm going to price target $220+ by EOY. That's a 100% return. Will Bitcoin go to $84k by then to match that return? We shall see.

Litecoin may not be a sexy investment due to age and lack of development excitement but Litecoin has a strength in doing something that's needed. Being an actual digital currency for simple basic transactions. I got Litecoin, I need to send $25, I want a penny transaction fee and for it to confirm within a reasonable time. That's when you use Litecoin and pretty much nothing else.

For reference too I will VATOP BTC.

Wouldn't Monero be superior in every way, though?

(Mar 2, 2022 01:46 PM)diesiel Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Wouldn't Monero be superior in every way, though? No.

Monero is actually less easily obtained because many common exchanges and wallets don't support it. While I do get XMR payments, it's not nearly the same volume as LTC. I'd be very happy if that was true. And I am a huge fan of XMR, so if you believe it's a better investment than go for it.

Also Monero didn't peak to new ATH in the 2021 bull run, while Litecoin did.

Liking XMR for the technology (especially the privacy) is not the same as liking it as an investment with returns.

If you want to get into long term, riskier plays with your $500, i would highly recommend looking into layer2 solutions.

Pinned thread on those^

Layer 2s is where I'm personally invested in outside of ETH (I hold practically no BTC tbh -I am an Etheriest for life). Personally, i am invested into Cartesi and Loopring... those are my hold on for dear lifers. Giving it years to pick up mass adoption.

Edit: Regarding OP, you don't have to go all in on anything. Diversification is smart. Open up the horizon.

I don't plan to buy on more, but I only accept LTC mainly so I'm accumulating regardless.

Until ETH doesn't suck, I'm on the LTC ship as well. Cheap fees and everyone knows it.

As far as investing goes... i am an etheriest for life

If you look at Ethereum L2's such as Arbitrum daily tx vs LTC we can see that L2's despite only taking 1% of ETH block space (Arbitrum and all other L2's) already handle nearly the same amount of TPD (Transactions per day). But I do agree that LTC will be a "preferred" method for now and will likely reach $400+ eventually.

70-100k tx daily on Arbitrum L2

120k-150k tx daily on LTC

Blazin - March 2, 2022, 4:04 pm

Yeah, I agree. Been making my HF payments with LTC lately. Very low fees and fast transactions and almost universally accepted.

The once silver of crypto. I have a few thousand I hold but I still am a bobble head with LTC and BCH.

Krour - March 2, 2022, 10:02 pm

In the early days, I was thinking Litecoin will surpass BTC because of the fees and fast transactions, I think the market doesn't work that way lol

Lrrr - March 2, 2022, 11:36 pm

I have made every payment on this site in LTC.

I use it as an every day payment form. It's the only obvious choice for cheap, fast, and scalable. It's also more adopted than XMR

Astonished - March 3, 2022, 6:34 am

I don't know as much about crypto as you or any of the other HF members do, but I also use Litecoin the most for payments.

On HF and other communities/marketplaces, Litecoin is my first listed payment method or what I ask people for if I'm selling something. I think my transactions are normally confirmed within minutes and the low fee is probably one of my favorite parts about it.

I probably sound like a massive noob because in most aspects I lack knowledge about crypto, I don't know how you make your judgment on what is a good investment/coin/network/project, etc. I have lots of learning and research to do, but I can say I think Litecoin is probably my favourite crypto to use and crypto, in general, is my main payment choice now.

LordCoder - March 3, 2022, 8:28 am

I love Litecoin. Low fees, fast and classic non-token crypto with its own blockchain and stuff. Furthermore 84M max supply, it's definitely silver in crypto.

Thanks for the advice, I will take it to collect more and more LTC.

LTC only collects about $2,000 tx fee daily

BCH is a hard drop for me. Almost no one pays with it on HF. I feel like a lot of the BCH transactions are fake. BCH ATH was $3800 in 2018. In the 2021 pump it peaked at $1500. That's just shit compared to Litecoin reaching a new ATH.

I was pretty close with the BCH community for a long time, mostly due to Orgy deep diving into it. I wanted to like it, I wanted to see adoption, I wasn't even invested heavily, I just wanted to see this underdog of a project (In my eyes) succeed (Or Blockstream fail, mostly see Blockstream fail).

There's no future there. The community around BCH is solid, they'll sacrifice a lot of their time, energy, and money, if they think it'll help BCH, but that's all they have, community. Their core development teams from the getgo were minuscule and they rarely saw eye to eye, they really only became united if it meant attacking Bitcoin or repelling an attack from Bitcoin. Since the beginning they've fought and bickered, eventually it got to the point that they began to fork away from each other. BCH has now forked into BSV (Fuck Craig Wright) and Bitcoin Cash ABC (Now eCash (This dev team believes they deserve a % of all block rewards. Now every block that's mined, something like 8% of the reward goes straight to the eCash developer(s))).

BCH is stuck, it's certainly not going to progress from here. They can continue to try and play catch up, such as their recent smart contract / EVM compatibility updates, but it's too little too late. Why would I go to BCH for DeFi when dozens of stronger networks exist for it now. They need to innovate and they're all out of innovation.

I'll still use BCH from time to time for those cheap and fast transactions when I need to move some funds around. Anymore though, there isn't much any reason to use BCH over LTC.

120k-150k is impressive for a network without DeFi, NFT's, and all the other bells and whistles that utterly spam networks with transactions. Wonder where all that usage is coming from.

That's why I am so bullish on LTC. I see the actual transaction volume. Real transactions.

Truth - March 3, 2022, 1:51 pm

I remember when LTC creator pretty much dumped on people at near ATH. I still own some and think it will rise. The economics of it are probably better than most coins now that the creator dumped all his coins. The main reason why I think people like it, is they just hate BCH so they pump

LTC as a better alternative.

But if I had to bet, I'll say BCH overtakes LTC at the end of the year. It can be anonymous through CashFusion and has support from Bitcoin.com and KimDotCom

The narrative against BCH on social media is strong, but I think once/if BTC fees rise again, people will be forced to face the truth. BCH overtook ETH at one point. I wouldn't leave that off the table too if ETH doesn't fix its crap.

Porn - March 3, 2022, 4:31 pm

Here's a website that shows crypto withdrawal fees across 37 different exchanges:

<https://withdrawalfees.com/>

LTC withdrawal fees are significantly cheaper than any top 10 cryptocurrency (besides XRP, ADA and SOL but that doesn't really matter because they are not nearly as widely adopted as BTC, ETH and LTC). I think LTC reaching a new ATH is still a gamble, my exchange recently started utilizing the lightning network so I only have to pay $0.50 cents for BTC fees and if Vitalik decides to ramp up development for ETH2.0 LTC use case will begin to diminish rapidly.

We have been waiting for a Litecoin moment for years now.

It's been trending down vs BTC since June 2019. You will also note that the occasional pump vs BTC has also been getting smaller and smaller.

Will Litecoin have it's day? I suspect it'll be a real challenge to break this trend but maybe our wishful thinking could pay off one day.

I do still hold my small LTC bag for the occasional transactions but it's hard to keep holding on to it when BTC is a way better hold.

IMO, the opportunity cost of holding LTC has been far greater this cycle (and probably the next). The trend is straight forward to see.

People like utility and the fact that DeFi protocols are built on top of coins like AVAX or SOL makes me question what makes the bull thesis for LTC so special when it seems like it only has raw transactions going for it. I don't think its wrong to allocate some money in LTC because it still has a place in the crypto ecosystem, but I would rather spend a larger portion of my portfolio elsewhere with better upside

My entire argument is in the first post. I think it's a lot of sound reasoning. You should argue against one of my points or make new ones. Not just say that LTC only has raw transactions. Because so does BTC.

It is unfortunate to see people comparing LTC to a L1 Platform like solana. They have no understanding of LTC and of decentralization.

LTC is the only coin with 10 years of up time, founder doesn't hold any bag there's no rug waiting to happen. The supply is capped, you can own 84 LTC and be in 1 in a million LTC club.

Development side, they've launched Mimbiewimble it's waiting to be signaled by miners. Recently the developers created Omnilite on LTC, basically a L-2 for NFT/Defi apps.

In a nutshell LTC does what it was created to do, it doesn't sell promises. It does it's job.

It has always started moving when Crypto market has peaked and if you think this market has any more juice. LTC at $100 is a killer deal

Over what period? I don't really recall LTC ever outperforming BTC aside from its initial breakaway. Otherwise it seemed to at best mirror it or slightly underperform. This is coming from someone who historically has bought LTC over BTC just because its generally more usable.

LTC at its current price is appetizing as hell.

Via Technical Analysis, I believe we're figuring up a H&S which could knock us below $60 back down to low $50s maybe at this market.

Don't forget, interest rates continue to rise & marketshares are falling all over. Tons of shortages and scared money.

If BTC keeps going down there will be no mercy with LTC. Remember that -20% daily on BTC comes together with a higher than 20% crash on alts including LTC. At this point having BTC is less risky because the ALTS will have a bigger dump than BTC as it always did.

Lilith - May 18, 2022, 2:34 pm

With Mimbalewimble coming to LTC, it's an even more exciting prospect. Hitting $50 or so would just mean I have to tighten my budget for a while so that I can stock up.

It's only less risky if you plan to sell in the near future. LTC is here to stay and with the development it's been getting, it isn't going anywhere.

"more commonly integrated"...seems important to me. A lot of ordinary people don't even know what Monero is still. And I'm not saying that XMR is a bad investment, on the contrary, I'm a huge fan of BTC, LTC, and XMR going forward.

XMR TXN per day is 28k.

I agree.

I bought my first chunk between 60-70$

And have buy orders in for between 50-60$

if it goes below 50$ I place some final buy orders at around 43-47$

To me scaling in like this is good for the long run & brings in less emotion to the buy-in price & the potential short-term losses.

Who cares what price Bitcoin is at? It's the best asset to accrue in the entire world. Even more so than food.

I believe that Bitcoin is an incredible technology that will hopefully continue to trend up with time.

I also believe the road to $100k & beyond will be extremely difficult.

The problem I see is that in order to get a moonshot in Bitcoin, it needs massive institutional adoption as they hold most of the capital that would allow such a move.

Why would institutions adopt Bitcoin if they directly benefit from the corrupt fiat system that Bitcoin hopes to replace? Seems counter intuitive.

Same with the fed & the big global banks. Isn't it in their best interest to stay clear of a technology that could replace them?

I don't see a clear path to real Bitcoin adoption & the Bitcoin standard. At $28k/Bitcoin, or 500 billion market cap, you're paying a lot of money for a slim chance of adoption. I can see why some may be tempted but the r/r on Bitcoin doesn't seem worth it at these prices.

Obviously I could be completely wrong but personally I won't be buying Bitcoin until it comes down some more.

Also it seems crypto is not participating in this stock market rally (in risk on assets!).

When people said the correlation to the stock market would break, I couldn't have predicted it would underperform. Worrisome.

All Bitcoin needs is 21 million people in the world to own 1 Bitcoin and all have one thing in common: "They won't sell a single satoshi for less then $100k/btc"

If the above was the case BTC would instantly be $100k.

Why is Litecoin going down as much as it is? And I ask because I'd like to know what metrics people are using to view the usability of the network? I've noticed the hashrate is at a 3-year high which is strange.

I'm a Litecoin fan and have held since 2017 because of the fundamentals being so similar to Bitcoin. Considering adding to my position but curious to know what reasons people have in mind for it being drained as much as it has been (especially vs Bitcoin).

YES YES YES. I think almost everyone actually USES Litecoin. So to me it has that intrinsic value. Fees for example on exchanges are often dirt cheap to withdraw.

Let's just compare Kucoin exchange withdrawal fees.

ETH .01 ($15.50)

BTC 0.001 ($22)

LTC 0.002 (18 cents)

I'd be super happy to be honest if 100% of members paid me in Litecoin over anything else. Fast, reliable, and lots of adoption.

Those $15 ETH and $22 BTC fees on KuCoin are annoying, I bought bytes for like $50 and lost $22 to KuCoin.

I have exchanged a lot of LTC though and maybe lost less than $10 in fees, and it's pretty fast.

Never underestimate LTC's ability to randomly pump and lead the market out of absolutely nowhere, that's why it's always good to hold LTC.

Technically you're not a person. You're a Bitcoin Maximalist Bot.

Also, you say you don't accept Ethereum or Shitcoins. So I'm guessing that you would accept Litecoin based on those parameters. C'mon dawg, you ain't really gonna diss on Litecoin are ya? It's like Bitcoins younger brother that's not as good looking but he's got some of his own talent too. Like the Manning brothers. Sure, Eli was goofy and Payton had all that talent. But Eli did win that awesome Super Bowl against the Patriots.

someone to switch to LTC for fees currently.

But even though the real fees are pennies for BTC transactions. Fees on exchanges are still inflated. They don't adjust to mempool, they simply gouge. You'd run into that exact same problem of paying $22 on Kucoin for a Bitcoin withdrawal. But yes, other exchanges have lower fees, but in all cases that I'm aware of, the Litecoin fee is pennies while the Bitcoin fee is dollars. Why pay $2.50 when LTC is 25 cents? I don't think it would be hard to do some fee comparison charts on services.

Give me a service/exchange that has BTC fees for me to compare which you think is reasonable.

Maybe while Bitcoin Maxi's and Eth Maxi's fight it out, Litecoin is just going to cover ground.

LTC continues to perform better, since now over 30% pricing difference compared to BTC. Look in first post for both VATOP's.

I am a big advocate for Litecoin. I almost exclusively use it when purchasing something with Crypto. May consider putting some money there, only $92 USD currently!

Updating this thread that LTC is outperforming BTC.

I wonder how long i should keep holding LTC, should i sell it now and buy back when it dips or keep holding till it's like 300-400 which could take very long.

Considering the market reaction to the latest news, I'd say hold. When things pop off, I'm fairly sure that LTC is going to be part of the gravy train. IMHO it's a potential leader.

I'm not a crypto expert but doesn't halving mean that half of the Litecoins will be burned. This means it will become more rare and eventually more valuable ? I was always thinking its like this - Let's say we have 10 Supercars produced and only 10 of them in the world. Let's say 5 of them sink in a ship, wouldn't that make the other 5 more valuable ?

The halvening means that the block reward is halved. This is something that as an investor into crypto you should be familiar with.

Currently every 2 1/2 minutes an LTC block is mined and 12.5 LTC is rewarded along with transaction fees. In about a month, that reward will go to 6.25 LTC.

Oh, I really had no clue that it works like that.

So in fact it means that less Litecoins will be rewarded which is still going to make it 1 idea more rare ?

Yes, it does add to the deflationary nature of Litecoin and Bitcoin making lowering the available supply.

Appreciate your answer. At least people won't laugh at me from now on when I talk about halving ?

Transhunt - July 2, 2023, 2:41 am

Targeting at least 0.007 ratio for the halvening
