My update regrading the new Shorts update:

Here's what i've found from my tests for the last weeks.

it seems like YouTube have implemented a checkpoint (if you have been in YouTube long enough you must have known the 301 freezing). Most by this moment have noticed that the videos always get that 1 view. Well, this 1 view is from YouTube crawlers/bots which check the video before send it to large audience. To solidify my theory, i uploaded dozens of videos and all got 1 view but the views didn't appear in the analytics but when i watch one of the videos on my phone or browser the view appears on the analytics dashboard. Which makes us 100% assured the 1 view is coming from YouTube bots/crawlers (since the views from bots doesn't count).

If bots are analysing the video before send it to a pool of audience then it must be checking fundamental factors:

- Analysing your reliability of content, if content is repetitive/spam.
- Analysing the channel history and trust score

If you get 1 view on the video and it doesn't score more views after 30mn to 45mn you're very likely shadowbanned and your channel is a ghost in the eyes of the algo.

If anyone have some hidden findings like this one, share it with us here.

I dont know too much but from what i understand now youtube altgoritm favorize longer short videos and also prioritize older channels compared to the new ones .So if you just start you need a lot of patience

I can probably teach you a few things, but I believe you just have to keep consistently uploading high quality trendy videos.

Older is the channel and higher is the number of videos or shorts (original content), there are high chances of getting views.

If you can tell it in this thread, others may get help from it.
