I'm currently taking Spanish class and before that I used a modded version of the expensive language app memrise.

And I watch Spanish telenovelas with English subtitles.

My favorite telenovelas (on Netflix) are Rosario tijeras, La Reina del Flow an All for Love.

I've been watching a few Spanish shows on Netflix for some time. I still only know the stuff I knew prior to watching them haha

That's cool, did you want to learn for something specific or just for fun?

I don't speak any Spanish, but I'm from a bilingual Canadian province and so I know a bit of French

I speak just enough to get by. My wife is from Peru, and we go down there just about every year (been less lately, due to the pandemic). So naturally she's a native speaker. But I can get by with telling taxi drivers where I need to go, ordering food, asking for directions, etc. And I understand conversations a whole lot more than I can participate.

We go to Lima every time, as it's where we have a house and where a lot of her family is. But the rest are a little outside of Cusco. So we go into the highlands once in a while. I've been to Arequipa- had family there for a little. I honestly preferred Arequipa over Lima. Little to like about Lima... it's loud and everything is gray.

I'm not fluent but I can communicate what is needed and understand spanish pretty well. Thanks Duolingo.

65DUD - June 1, 2022, 6:43 pm

Well i'm hispanic so yeah i do speak fluent spanish.

TikTokCash - June 1, 2022, 6:46 pm

My mother is from Chile, so I speak conversational Spanish!

Jake Johnson - June 1, 2022, 7:06 pm

I took Spanish classes in high school which were just the basics. I would definitely not be able to communicate fluently in the language. However, I do feel like I might be able to understand some conversations as I can pick up on some more important words.

Nullusia - June 3, 2022, 8:10 am

No hablas espanyol.

I understand the odd generic word I guess from watching shows.
