Thread: My Chipotle Addiction \(My Strange Addiction\)

Jerry Smith - April 17, 2022, 12:55 am

Ever since I worked at Chipotle I can't stop eating it.

Please send help, I don't know what to do anymore, I can't help myself.

I spent so much money last year on it, it's bad.

lulzcat - April 17, 2022, 1:32 am

Just do what alcoholics do and keep going until you develop a life-threatening illness.

EDIT: I feel like I should mention that I was a raging alcoholic and just decided to stop one day because I knew it was starting to become a problem. You literally just have to make the choice not to ingest the shit. It's actually pretty simple, just don't do it. I still want to catch a buzz from alcohol but I consciously make the decision not to.

Exercise helps to get off food addiction/eat less for the day, ig.

Blunt - April 17, 2022, 3:42 am

Bruh just exercise and you'll eventually wanna start eating better. if you don't like working out just diet a day at a time. It less everyday

I did already but they fired me due to having car problems one day (it was a 1hr commute one way).
I tried to apply to a different one, got an interview, never heard back.

I even applied to the one by where I stay and never got a call for an interview.

Man, big depressing.

I just picked up a job at Qdoba though, I've never tried it but I hope it's as good and/or better.

Pancheros > Qdoba > Chipotle

Don't get me wrong, I love chipotle but I've had the worst experiences there with service compared to the others. Pancheros is the best hands down though.

I don't believe you can't stop. I think you're choosing to eat them because you want to.

L A M - April 17, 2022, 7:16 pm

Chipotle is fucking good dude... Love that shit.

Rionxee - April 17, 2022, 7:25 pm

It's a bit normal, my friends that worked in fast food developed a taste for it even when they were not working and stopped working at those places in high school. I think it's normal to develop food cravings in an environment like that since everything is built to make you want it. Chipotle isn't too bad though, could be worse like you were addicted to taco bell.

Psinetic - April 17, 2022, 7:32 pm

You might be able to have your bank block purchases from Chipolte. Just a thought.

My point still remains, addiction cannot be proven to exist.

If you have proof post it here: <https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=6173939>

I'm gonna go ahead and disagree with you there. As a recovering addict (unnamed addiction) I can confirm without a doubt, there's absolutely nothing about "wanting" it. You can't say I want something when I'm literally contemplating suicide because I can't STOP doing it. When you aren't in control, you AREN'T in control. Now, is his addiction to Chipolte really a valid "addiction"? Probably not. Buuuuut, let's not go around telling other people their mental health isn't real, it's not really a Christian thing to do or say (this coming from a Christian also).

You throw away everything you said earlier about thinking critically, "even if it disagrees with your personal beliefs," in a matter of seconds when it strikes an emotional nerve with you. It's Christian not to lie and to believe in free will. Addiction presumes the person hasn't got any free will in the matter. Your personal experience isn't proof. If you have objective proof for addiction, post in the thread.

Hey buddy.

Not everyone is Christian, and even people like myself who are, don't take everything in biblical scripture word for word.

It's a satirical post since it was my 2000th post on HF, it wasn't meant to be taken serious, although I do love Chipotle.

Now please, take your happy ass back to SRPP and keep seeing how low you can get your popularity.

bevc - April 17, 2022, 11:22 pm

You'll just have to go cold turkey.

(haha).

I don't mind being unpopular. It has little to do with taking the Bible word for word. Free will is essential to any genuine Christian. The concept of addiction contradicts free will, and there is no proof for its existence.

Quote which part of that blog post by the biased Institute of Drug Abuse proves it exists and how they've proved it? All I see are more assertions and assumptions that it exists. Keep in mind changes in the brain are a correlation often caused by drug damage. This is not causative proof of "addiction".

Swearing is not Christian behaviour.

Okay so what is your source, excluding biblical scripture and "biased" religious beliefs?

Try the book The Biology of Desire: Why Addiction Is Not a Disease by Neuroscientist Marc Lewis.

The burden of proof is on those claiming it exists. The evidence for addiction doesn't stand up to logic.
