Thread: Don't know how to find freelance work

cyberpunk26 - May 5, 2022, 4:40 pm

I live in a lousy city where there is no IT companies around at all. My best chance of making money is working as a freelancer. A senior IT working friend who saw me working told me i am overqualified for many jobs. How do i find freelance work? I'm in cybersecurity for 2 years now Having a job that you're overqualified for is better than not having a job. Most IT centered jobs can be remote, have you tried applying outside of your city?

Check out my reply I posted about something similar.

"remote jobs from home site:docs.google.com/spreadsheets"

Some examples:

Good luck.

There are many platforms on the Internet thanks to which freelancers can get orders, especially in the IT industry. Let useme.com be a good example (on this page there are many remote job offers, unfortunately it is adapted to the European market, but I think you will find many counterparts on the web).

Check out Hitmarker, they got some decent jobs sometimes.

Make it your job to market yourself and open up those leads. Hit anything pertaining to cybersecurity and make a new for yourself. No one has done it in silence.
