Thread: Any decent games that dont require a decent PC?

Shrooms - June 15, 2022, 5:19 pm

Anyone know of any decent games I can play while I work on fixing my PC, currently using a shitty laptop it's not really bad but nowhere near as good as my PC.

Getting bored not being able to play my usual games now I am back on a PC.

All I can think of is runescape, oldschool rs, or private servers?

Was looking into possibly playing a private server, I haven't played in years though I'm unsure if I would enjoy it

Thats true. You could always look up gaming toplists and see whats new, etc, filter to your liking?

Yeah I will have a look, usually find a game and get into it for an hour or two then never play it again it's getting annoying.

You can't go wrong with FPS games like CS:GO or even Valorant.

Dota 2 and League of Legends are popular MOBA games.

All these games should run on most laptops.

Haven't tried League, I have tried to run CSGO for some reason it is absolute shit. It should be able to run on this laptop but it just dies when I try.

That is very strange. CS:GO was created to be played on third-world toasters.
Try lowering the graphics. They don't matter anyway.

Yeah I played a lot of CS:GO on my PC and it ran amazingly.

I have tried lowering the graphics and a few other things, the FPS is exactly the same no matter what. Unsure what the problem is.

That's rough.
There's always Valorant...

Personally, I can kill good amount of time in GTA: SA

Yeah I might give Valorant another try, tried to get into it when it first came out but just gave up after a week or two. Had a CSGO mindset and I felt like I was just getting call of duty players or fortnite on my team with 0 communication.

Yeah, communication is not great. Especially in their casual 5v5.
You might find better teammates in ranked.

Yeah I was playing ranked at the time, there was no difference. Even at a half decent rank it was still very hard to get wins and a team that would communicate, that's why I went back to CS:GO.

#Skyline - June 15, 2022, 6:48 pm

Old School Runescape can run on one single CPU core.

Yeah been thinking about playing it again or a private server, haven't played in a long time though Valorant is much better than CS:GO, this is coming from someone with 5,000 hours on CS:GO. The switch is worth it.

Maybe I will give it another shot, I haven't played since I think KillJoy was released. Think that was the name of her.

You could look at games that are more CPU bound?

Guild wars 2 is one... I can't think of any others, but they exist.

Hearthstone, Poxnora, Heroes 3, settlers 4-7

zeksek - June 19, 2022, 9:56 pm

Splitgate is pretty fun and should probably run on almost anything, I got it to run pretty alright on a 15 year old PC.

It's like halo but with portals, it's super cool.

If you like superhero / super villain type stuff you should check out City of Heroes Homecoming. It's an older MMO that was brought back to life via private servers by the community. Free to play and should have no problem meeting the min requirements for it as the game is pretty old but still a blast to play.

Sure I will give it a look, should I look into the private servers or start with the main game.

There's TFT in league if you're into that. Requires less and doesn't matter if you have low frames.

Private servers, specifically the Homecoming private servers. The main game was shut down years ago unfortunately.

just gonna throw out there: csgo is a more demanding game than most people realize. you can use it as a benchmark sure, but don't underestimate how much power it actually needs. i still get random frameskips when surfing or whatever, running @ lower-than-native resolution and graphics settings all set to low. all on a laptop that's barely a year old. if you want to play cs, play cs:s.

league is fun if you have friends who play league. internet randoms hardly qualify. but, it does run on literally anything.

runescape has been my usual go-to for low performance games, but keep in mind it performs normally on low specs because it performs terribly on higher specs as well; there is no good performance in that game until jagex finally ditches java once and for all (and runelite or another tpc follows) honourable mention goes to WoW private servers. i started up a new character on a wotlk server and been playing that on and off. pretty fun, but the community is smaller than real wow.

chess is also a great game that i think everyone should play.

Try Xen Rebirth, its a game from 2013-2017 it should be working on your pc, because it works on my shitty Intel Celeron 530
