What do you guys think about this?

Bill Gates says crypto and NFTs are 100% based on 'Greater Fool theory'

Bill Gate's whole life work is based around a centralized web, centralized operating system, and centralized databases making money off the consumer by collecting sensitive information about your lifestyle and products you use, so do you think this whole decentralize web movement where consumers are in a position of power, and they get control of their information and decide what can be done with it is in his best interest? of course not!

Gates loves to make people inject experimental poison onto their body 3 times a year.

Yet he dislikes when people start investing into decentralised digital currency's not forced upon us by governments or banks.

Gates wants a monopoly over everything he suggests people, because if it's not his business it's not good apparently.

Kinda scary that he's the biggest farmland owner in the US now and that they're all trying to force genetically manipulated shit onto us in the form of "fake meat"

Probably because he can't make some money on the side like the did with the injectable cough syrup he shilled for.

Bill Gates has always disliked bitcoin if you watch his interviews from previous years, he likes the technology behind it but doesnt like that people use it to avoid taxes and to buy drugs on the black market.

Who cares. Millions of people say something entirely different including many of you. Just like he might not be willing to pay a single dollar for a work of art that is simply a pack of cigarettes that was crumbled up, someone else might be willing to pay a million dollars for it.
