If spent wisely, money definitely brings us happiness. But, there will be always exceptions.

I had my most happiest moments when I had little money(I'm not a very rich person - but improving).

Money doesn't directly buy happiness. You can't go to the store and buy 1 happiness. It sure as fuck facilitates it though. Good health, wonderful experiences, comfortable living, money is one of the requirements for everything.

Money improves life quality, life quality improves happiness. But so does a caring family.

I dunno about happiness, but it helps with my anime merch addiction ??

Money definitely opens up some doors and experiences, gives you more chances to be happy.

I don't consider myself rich or someone who has a lot of money, but I'm pretty sure I'm super happy. Money in itself doesn't make me happy, what I do with it can, like buying things for my daughter that I know she'll like, going on a trip or vacation with my family and such.

Money does not create happiness, but it sure enables it a hell of alot.

No not at all, it's useful but it does t bring happiness whatsoever.

Sure money does make things better, but true happiness comes from within. It took me years to understand that.

Having some money just means you don't have the stress of being broke. Doesn't really buy happiness, just keeps away misery.

Makes everything easier and better to a point. Might not be it for some people excluding me
