Thread: Suffering from legal issues althrough innocent

cyberpunk26 - July 30, 2022, 10:23 am

Although i am an adult i was appointed my parents as my adult legal guardians. My father is a senior lawyer and he scammed the authorities to appoint me him as a guardian although there was no reason for the court to do so. Recently, I opened a process of transferring the guardianship to the state, and i am even backed up by a state free lawyer appointed by the judge in the case. My father wants a complete and total control over me and my life, and he is willing to fight by all means to get it. 4 months ago he asked for a restraining order against me although there was no justified reason to get the warrant. He successfully got it for 3 months, and then he tried attacking my LinkedIn account and take down my professional life. I responded in a way that didn't defy the restraining order. He filed a false accusation complaint against my, defying the order, and i was investigated in the police a week and a half ago. I talked without claiming my right for an attorney, and i think they gave me a police record, prior my past was clean. My father is now threatening to file a civil criminal complaint against me if i will not cancel the guardianship transferring request. A few months ago, my parents discovered i am completely qualified to easily earn 20-30 dollars an hour, which means i can easily afford fighting and taking down the guardianship. If ill get a record i wouldn't be able to earn this much, and ill get stuck on 10 dollars an hour website testing for 5 years till the record is erased. I think my father is sophisticately fighting against the losing the guardianship, and fighting against me taking it completely down. What do you think i should do? Is it possible to get a decent hacking position with a record? or my professional life are over for the next 5 years?

What I think you should do is seek actual legal counsel, and not the advice of a forum.

I find it important hearing the hacking perspective, and not only the legal one

I am not sure what to suggest after reading that. I only hope you and your father can sort things out.

No advice on this forum is going to help you very much buddy.
Best of luck to you.

I know it's against criminal code but am interested. What are your charges and how come are they going after you if innocent?

The only one that matters right now is a legal one.

It's a thing. Even if you're fine you can be ruled as not able to take care of yourself, essentially. It's fucked. Most famous case of this is Britney Spears and her dad.

Judges have way too much power in the US.

Wasn't there a thread last month by someone else regarding guardianship or something? I feel like this is an elaborate meme.

I think it was the same guy (OP) if I'm not mistaken.

Yes. 'Expert testimony' are essentially just paid actors in our joke of a court system. It's not easy but someone that knows the system/is motivated (with financial resources) can do it. Such as OPs dad.

I am 27 years old. I had some issues with asylums and the psychiatric system for no real reason, i don't suffer from a mental condition and i am in full health. My father lied to the psychiatrist and the psychiatrist as a result gave the adult guardianship recommendation, without even seeing me or speaking to me

Appointing guardianship to an ordinary adult person is not easy at all and might even be impossible. I became a ward without an actual reason for it was done by deceiving the psychiatrist and the court sophisticatedly by my father. I am highly intelligent and highly educated and never needed an adult guardianship statues. Britney Spears case is very different than mine, for she is a complete flip flop and actually needed an adult guardian, this is why with all of her fortune she couldn't get the guardianship terminated, i know cases of wards who ceased their guardianship for 5k dollars.

I am a US citizen although i don't leave in the US. The entire issue is not in the US

This is not in the US but the rules in my country are pretty samilliar to the US rules. My father tried to get guardianship upon me when i was 19 yo and request was denied. He tried again when i was 20 years old and the request was denied again. So, he learned how to trick the system, and tried for the third time when i was 21 yo, and succeeded. He is a senior lawyer, which proves the adult guardianship wasn't easy to achieve

As far as i know it was done for free all of the 3 attempts. But this is true, sometimes they recommend only because you paid them. My father yearly salary is about 250k dollars and he barely works, he is nearing retiremnet

File a freedom of information act request for any records pertaining to yourself and your father. That will tell you what is happening from a legal perspective. From a civil perspective, any pending or closed matters will be public record and can usually be found online. Speaking with the police or any civil issues like this will not preclude you from any employment you are qualified for at this point.

I still want to have a clean record, this whole things sucks

(Jul 31, 2022 07:05 AM)phantomman55 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) what do you mean clean record? I think the record isn't dirty? It's not like you stole stuff from someone. You should be ok.

What country do you reside in?

By clean record i meant no police records at all. Defying a restraining order is as severe as stealing something by the law in the country i reside at. I rather not disclose my location..

hmm different strokes for different folks dont get why they trying to be in control so much and i dont get why you want your freedom badly coming here to post shows you have no bucks but get a lawyer
