Thread: Old client suddenly demanding pictures of "me" smiling

Ebonite - August 14, 2022, 2:24 pm

So, i have a client who have been talking with me (im using a pack) for months. he got to a point where he's a friend with "me". few weeks ago, he started asking a weird request. "I want to see you smile". "I want to see you smile with your teeth". I evaded it for weeks, saying shit like im shy. im not comfortable .. etc Recently he became very distant because of it and simply evading the smile request is the entire reason.

I don't have any pics of the girl smiling at all. I really don't want to lose this client so I am considering actually asking for someone to photoshop smiles onto existing selfies of the girl.

anyone interested ? anyone has any other advice?

Work on your social engineering. Push the guy away a bit, make it seem like he's losing you instead of the other way around.

I'm pretty sure you can fake a smile with faceapp don't quote me on that tho, or reverse search some images from your pack and see if you get a similar girl but smiling.

And like said above some nice SE should do the trick.

Make up some BS excuse like "I've got braces so I look ugly haha"

Or "my teeth are not the whitest, I don't think they look good"

Who knows, maybe he pays for the teeth whitening lol.

"I'm a little self-conscious about my smile because my teeth are yellow/crooked/etc"

"My boyfriend found out that I've been selling my nudes and he knocked out some of my teeth"

"It's not easy for me to do this (sell my nudes) so idk if I can smile about it"

This is why you always maintain control over your conversations with buyers and prospective buyers. Never let them take the conversation anywhere you don't have the upper hand.

That's the long game. You find some pictures from a dentist's website and send them to him. Ask him to give you the smile he wants.

Theres an app called FaceApp and it can put a smile on whatever pic as long as it clearly shows the face sometimes it turns out fucked looking so test it on a few pics but he's old and probably doesnt even know that type of app exists. Its all free aswell and you can just crop out the watermark.
