Thread: Opinion on 'iced out' jewelry?

interbellum - September 4, 2022, 7:57 am

I see a lot of rappers and artists wear them lately. Pretty curious to see what HF their opinion is on it. Would you ever buy/wear 'iced out' jewelry?

Btw you can search it up if you have never heard of it but it's basically chains or just bracelets full with diamonds. The prices of it are crazy.

Dialog - September 4, 2022, 8:51 am

It's not for me. Only jewellery I wear is my seal ring and watches anyway. At some point I contemplated purchasing a Rolex with fairly subtle diamond hour markers, but decided against it and went with a model without any diamonds. I've seen plenty of crazy expensive watches such as Daytona's and Day-Dates with diamond and gem-set bezels that I would not wear. Too flashy for me.

Yeah I'll have to agree. Too flashy for me aswell

About your rolex, which model did you eventually buy? The one without the diamonds. Pretty curious

But the huge iced out chains seems a bit excessive to me.

Yeah I don't like the huge chains either. I'm mostly into bracelets.

I ended up getting a vintage 16014 and still wear it a lot. It's a great piece that you can easily dress up, but I also love wearing it with a more sporty outfit.

Plague - September 4, 2022, 10:52 am

Not a fan. I love jewelry, but I prefer more of a minimalist approach.

Rings and watches all day, but definitely not iced out. For these rappers, it's just a huge flex so I sort of get it.

Gary - September 4, 2022, 11:00 am

Iced out can look pretty cheesy. It really depends on how its done.

Why would you start a discussion with, "google what I'm talking about and then let's talk about it"? Since I'm pretty sure almost everyone knows what iced out jewelry is? That's why I said incase you don't know what it is, search it up. Also provided a quick description. Will post a picture though

570RM - September 4, 2022, 11:15 am

I like diamonds but stay away from flashing it.

Velma - September 4, 2022, 11:21 am

You would not imagine how much money has been lost in the picture after the person decided to put after market bs diamonds on those watches. I don't mind jewellery being iced out so your chains rings etc but they really not going to maintain any value especially those watches what a crime imo. If you want diamonds on such watches just go and get factory set diamond watches, I find those watches hideous also just a big screaming rob me item.

Also lots of artists / rappers Know they are losing the "investment" money with those diamonds on watches, just another thing to put on their taxes I guess.

Eran - September 4, 2022, 12:25 pm

Not a fan of jewelry. A silver chain is what I want but nothing more. Simplicity is key.

webdev77 - September 4, 2022, 12:28 pm

But i dont see the need for it to be covered in Diamonds. With that being said, if i had the money to not give a fuck what i buy. Why not?

I get your point. Like I already stated, the only jewelry piece I will EVER buy that's full with diamonds would be a bracelet.

Masteredsaiyan - September 4, 2022, 2:33 pm

I personally wouldn't go for it... but everyone has their own style.

SIM-3970461 - September 4, 2022, 3:01 pm

"icing" out anything is just ruining the jewelry and it'll be far less valuable down the road. Just collect diamonds if u want but dont smack it on gold.

The Pact - September 5, 2022, 3:01 am

My engagement ring is iced out it has eight diamonds. Ha! No I guess not because it's supposed to be ALL around the gold right? I don't think ANYONE but rappers wear this shit? I kind of like it though. I agree with Zero.

mickeh - September 5, 2022, 2:42 pm

I would rather have just gold, i would only have diamonds on a pinky ring

Rionxee - September 5, 2022, 3:39 pm

Disgusting honestly, own a watch but don't be gaudy about it. Plenty of watches that will keep their value for the same price and look better in the long run, that type of watch only really fits a singular type of person. Why own a horrible iced out watch like that when you can own a Rolex Daytona or Richard Mille that will keep their value without looking like you walked out of a rap video.

?ord Frieza - September 5, 2022, 3:47 pm

As I've gotten older a simple gold chain or minimal Cuban link bracelet does it for me. Iced out jewels are too loud for me. I'm not against it, just not my preference.

NARVI - September 5, 2022, 7:56 pm

I had a link similar to this but in the end you pay 45k/100k for a necklace but it weighs enough to be worth only 20k in gold and the LQ diamonds are less than 5/10k no doubt. waste of money .

DashPHP - September 6, 2022, 12:38 am

I'm not a big fan on jewellery, but iced out Grills is something i've been diggin for awhileee

Casp?r - September 6, 2022, 6:09 am no looks tacky and brings down the value a lot, it ruins a good watch imo. Dream watch is probably a date just.

Yuup, but hey, if they're buying it as some sort of investment then that something I could get behind, I'm sure those pieces in OP would gain some pretty good value, the custom stuff will likely decrease in value faster, depending on the artist that owned it.

Just my 2 cents.

GrandpaSherman - September 12, 2022, 8:55 pm

Fake that shit, adding diamonds to a watch will always lower the value of the watch. Factory or plain jane

Custom pieces and large chains don't hold value.

Most jewelers know this and will ice out fake or franken watches (AP, Rolex, Pateks) will real movements but fake dials, cases, etc. because they know they can make money both ways if they save the genuine parts while selling idiots fakes Moissanites or lab grown diamonds are the way to go if you want the look.

But you also better have armed security guards if you don't want to be held up and robbed.

licker98 - September 13, 2022, 3:45 am

Looks tacky to me. Not much difference between that and having a pocket full of diamonds to show people.

Fallenour - September 14, 2022, 7:15 am

As a financial advisor, and even before then, it makes me twitch and begin to seize at the idea of how much people will pay for an asset like this that depreciates, and yes, they do depreciate.

Most of them aren't real diamonds, crystal, or actually are, which is IMHO, far worse, as carbon based anything is worthless.

If you want to impress people, retire early by not buying things like this, and get your financial affairs in order.

Having a paid off house, car, and a strong savings is far more impressive to a woman than a maxed out credit card you make payments on for a watch she doesn't care about.

LeetSpeed - October 4, 2022, 11:15 am

I like iced out jewelry. Everything except iced out watches. I do own a few iced out rings real diamonds etc.. I'm one of those handful of people that don't pay anything near retail for my bling as I know what some of these materials cost.

Evading - October 4, 2022, 1:33 pm

Looks cheap & dirty imo.

I'd rather have one statement piece with bigger diamonds than those crusty looking watches & chains.

BiNBo - October 4, 2022, 1:33 pm

Worked as an appraiser for jewelry for awhile, and honestly it's mostly just for show. The people who buy those types of pieces have no clue that they're being charged a markup of thousands of percent. The actual value of those pieces is far lower than what they paid. They'll argue all day, "nah man this watch cost me 20k." and in reality it's worth a tenth of that and mostly for the gold. All those little mini chip sized diamonds are all but worthless.

People would always get so mad when I gave them the actual market value of pieces instead of the jewelry store markup value. In reality when something is covered in little tiny chips of diamond like that, usually the gold is worth 95% of the value. Sure it might be 2 carats of stones, but in reality even taking them out to melt it for the metals is more valuable just because all those mini stones aren't but like 0.01 carats each and no diamond dealer wants those stones as opposed to a solid 2 carat stone they'd pay out the ass for.

Then thats just outright stupid. Jewelry is real estate - would you buy a house that was all fucked up for a premium? These rappers go broke buying iced out watches and chains thinking they can sell it later on for 1:1 or more (it is not purely a flex, no one is spending tens and thousands of dollars on jewelry just to put fucked up aftermarket diamonds on them to "flex"). Spend $100k on aftermarket diamonds on your jewelry for it to be worth $10k as soon as they're set (-90%) - or spend $100k on a luxury factory Rolex, AP, Patek, etc and see a greater ROI in a couple years while actively wearing it. You're also building a much more respectable status that way

Unless you make the kinds of money they do I don't think you can say they aren't buying it just to flex.

Go watch interviews with rappers who spend insane amounts on their chains. A lot of the rappers with the most expensive chains have a team of accountants doing their actual investment. Jewelry is purely to flex for a lot of these guys.

It doesn't make sense because we're not in their tax bracket.

I think anyone buying jewelry as an investment is stupid to be honest, just buy gold.

I understand the flexing with diamonds on a chain, even a bracelet - you're not necessarily fucking up anything "limited" or worth value, simply just blowing money away when you could use it. The issue I have is when rappers buy an amazing timepiece just to fuck it up with aftermarket diamonds. That is not a flex to anyone who has money - it's simply smarter and better to keep it plain, and the opposite when icing it out. If you want to flex in that regard and show your different tax bracket status, buy factory diamonds. A $20k iced out chain isn't really "status" or proving of a point. It's funny when a rapper will sign a low 6 figure deal and blow it on iced out jewelry that's only beneficial for the gram, just bad money management because of what they see other rappers doing.

Let's also not forget the amount of rappers that are financing their jewelry and cars to impress others because they can't afford to pay in full. They aren't as rich as you think man. Look at their cars, jewelry, houses, lifestyle. Add it all up (after tax) and there's no way they are actually able to manage and afford all of that with their net/pay. They don't make that much money lol

Also, watches are great investments and not stupid, but investing in jewelry in general is pretty dumb so I get you on that

Cooligan - October 27, 2022, 7:10 pm

Hmm I'm not sure about that, a person who's hobby is to steal jewelry obviously know where to sell it that's just plain stupid to sell it directly as if it's yours. You gotta sell it in the black market or through people who does. Plus if you're wearing such jewelry in public you can easily get yourself attracted to such people and it might even be the cause of your death if not you might even drop it somewhere or misplaced it and will never ever find it again. If I have a luxury car no one would be able to steal it with no consequences ?

If I was a fan, I would probably spend my money on new blades or something.

gregcheese - December 19, 2022, 4:43 pm

looks kinda dumb if you know the person wearing it couldn't afford it but on some people it looks fire af

Biggy - December 19, 2022, 4:45 pm

Can't really say it's my thing, I just couldn't justify spending that much money on jewlery. I'd rather have nice houses, or even cars.

+mK - December 19, 2022, 4:51 pm

I could think of many things I'd rather spend my money on, iced jewelry wouldn't be on that list. I think the culture behind it almost makes it REQUIRED to get anywhere in the rap genre.

Not a fan for it on most things, but I've seen a few clean iced

Yin Yang - December 19, 2022, 5:13 pm

I'm not a fan. I used to have an iced Cuban link necklace when I was younger but I don't wear it anymore. I never liked iced watches either.

I pretty much agree with this. It's sad to see that some people are actually spending so much money on this iced out jewelry.

It looks nice, sure, but it's just a huge amount.

Mr. Corleone - December 20, 2022, 7:46 am

In my opinion, if you can afford it, then why not?

It's someone's own taste and their money. They can spend it how they like.

I'm mostly into iced out bracelets ngl. I personally like them A LOT. They just look so clean.

What are your thoughts on bracelets?

What are your thoughts on bracelets? I actually don't mind bracelets or necklaces. I think watches are a little overkill with being iced

Blazin - December 20, 2022, 7:52 am

If you can afford it and won't make a dent on your money why not, bracelets look clean as hell. Who wouldn't want a iced out bracelet.

.RTCX - December 20, 2022, 8:06 am

Looks like garbage to be honest and all the reports that wear this trash look ridiculously stupid but hey it's a clown world you know if you don't look like an idiot nobody cares about you

Dredd - December 20, 2022, 8:09 am

If you've got excess money and can afford it plus a good lifestyle then fair play, but most people that have expensive jewellery are just faking it until they hopefully make it. Which is sad portraying something you're not.

Yep, I agree. That's the sad thing about the most people that are wearing iced out jewelry. Especially rappers imo.

It's not even just jewelry look at cars now days everyone's got a financed car especially over here in the UK everyone's living beyond their means.

I think it ruins the classiness of a lot of watches that are modified such as AP's and Patek's.

What sort of modifications do people do to Pateks?

Sorry, I meant when they ice them out and replace the original bezel and face.

limb3r - December 20, 2022, 5:47 pm

It's very much an acquired taste.
