Thread: What are the most profitable MMOs to bot on? void677 - September 16, 2022, 5:21 pm

Right now I have 4 bots for World of Warcraft. I have 2 for the retail version and 2 for classic, I'm making about $8-12 bucks a day from them all collectively, by selling the in-game currency I make on g2g (no not g2a), and also funneling the gold into WoW tokens which gives me battle.net balance, which I can then use to buy game gift keys to sell on g2a.

They are all running on crappy dell optiplex's that I managed to grab off of goodwills website for very cheap (They have a lot of really good flippable electronics on there in general). What MMOs do you guys use bots on to make irl money?

Ive had friends have really good success betting on RS

Meant to say botting, my bad.

Go to any of those gold selling websites, and look at what they offer. They aren't going to waste resources on something that won't make them money.

Yes I've done that already but there's not as much info available online as to the rate of in-game currency specific bots actually generate. Most bot devs will inflate the numbers for sales.

Go to gold selling site

Make list of games you could bot

Find a forum dedicated to cheating at that game

Ask them

That's pretty cool. Why haven't you thought to scale this? Only takes you 4 days out of the month to start generating profit? That's really good.

I am working on a way to scale this, with the temporary issues being in order to scale it I have to expand the bot to other servers because I already have monopolized and maximized my potential on the current game servers I run them on, and to achieve this I have to learn how to optimize GPU/CPU usage across my virtual machines evenly, because if I have too many independent computers running I will use too much electricity and also turn my office into a sauna lol, and I have almost 0 knowledge of VMs at the moment. I know how to turn them on and that's basically it.

You may want to look into VPS with Linux. I'm sure there's a way to run multiple WoW clients. If there's no GUI would this affect the bot? I've only ever botted on my own pc I'll definitely look into that, no GUI shouldn't affect the bot no. Thank you for the suggestion.

I used to do this when I ran a botting service on RS. I would find VPS websites that offer first month promotions, use up the first month, cancel, make another account and do it again. I used to use VPSLand. I don't even know if they are around anymore. I didn't do linux servers though. I know it would've been beneficial if I did. I just couldn't figure out how to work linux.
