Thread: Do you agree with Andrew Tate?

coco. - September 19, 2022, 1:39 am

Out of curiosity, I'm wondering how many here agree with his way of thinking.

As a women, I get some of it but 95% of it is barbaric and outlandish. Like he's playing an edgy character of sorts lol.

What are your thoughts?

Until he started getting banned. I had never even heard of him. From what I have seen he reminds me of some of these ebook sellers here.

Can't go against someone that's actually trying to help men.

I hate some of his comments but will tolerate most of it because I somewhat agree with his insights.

Agreed. Most of his high ego comes for the camera. They're both humble imo.

Blockonome - September 19, 2022, 5:13 am

I do think some things makes sense and others do not. Regardless, this is a marketing tactic from his side and he has played it very well.

Upgrader - September 19, 2022, 5:24 am

Says crazy shit half of the time to garner some 'controversy' and be spread like wildfire. He has some good takes although I believe these are the only times he's being genuine (roughly 5% of the time as I agree with your 95% metric)

ParryHooter - September 19, 2022, 5:28 am

He annoys the living shit out of me, for real.

Porn - September 19, 2022, 6:11 am

Andrew said it himself, you shouldn't take some of the shit he says serious. A lot of people (younger) actually believe everything he says (abusing women, trafficking) which I can see why it may be considered dangerous. He only says these ridiculous things to gain fame and blow up to younger audiences.

Zeus - September 19, 2022, 6:32 am

He is actually a legend and is one of the guys who was exposing too much that he couldn't tell people (people didn't want the stuff he was saying getting out) to be cancelled and blocked from all social media.

It's when he started talking about the higher ups, once you do that you get a warning from them. They always give you a warning before doing something bad. They did the same with DMX and MJ. Rule number 1 is to never mention their plans, the matrix in depth, life hacks and loopholes.

Gary - September 19, 2022, 6:37 am

Don't care for him. Wonder how long social media platforms start punishing those that feature him in a podcast and stuff like that.

Justin - September 19, 2022, 6:56 am

Just a tiny bit of what he says makes sense to me as a man.

There's misogyny in some of his speech, on other parts he's actually portraying good behaviour for a man, like when he says a man must protect his family, stuff like that.

So I don't 100% like him, but the % of liking him is probably around 20-30%. His lifestyle of being the top G with 9000 women doesn't attract me.

I'm just a casual guy with a gf and we're really happy together, go out on travels, stay at home and watch movies, we're enjoying the little things. (Yeah we do get excentric sometimes, we spend money on 'conventional fun', dinner, bla bla).

Truthfully you got life all on point man. Goals for most of us. xD

I have to say though, you are wrong in saying there is misogyny in Andrew Tate... Maybe in the 20 seconds clips that you may have watched, but without context, you shouldn't jump to conclusion like that.

It's proven time and time again he is not a misogynist and does love Women. He actually even admitted that if he could go back 5 years, he would stick with one woman and not a bunch.

Contrary to belief, I think the younger generation are actually on point with Tate's mindset... Lookin back in the last week alone, all the hate-tate tiktokers are overweight women that won't even let the otherside share their point of view. That's ALL I've seen. it's crazy.

Not short clips, but the content produced by them: <https://rumble.com/TateSpeech>

Really it's important to watch the whole thing as this person truly has a LOT to say, not enough to be conveyed via short clips.

Bleh, I love it.

Social media been filled with all them extreme feminists and stupid woke people, so when someone from the polar opposite of the spectrum came at them with a similar energy, everyone started crying and screaming while they've shoving the same type of shit ideologies on everyone for the past few years.

The funniest part is that i have only met really few feminist that could have a discussion about him without screaming or saying shit they can't back with full proof and not just half information.

Algorithm plays a big role in this, on my feed, 6-7 out of 10 videos are just the cringy basic "self improvement hustle" type videos, so a dude would say "i live most of his content". However, on the feed of a girl i know, 6-7 out of 10 videos of him are about the controversial stuff.

Also if i'm running of them pages posting his content, ofc i will only clip the juicy part and post them to get views lol.

In general idrc about him, I wouldn't care if both sides end up dying, it doesn't affect me anyways. I doubt the guy cares anyways as it's clear from what's shown that he already has money from before this trend. Can't wait to see more of his type which will piss off more feminists and woke people.

Well, it's entertainment. Definitely playing a character based on himself. Part of the humour is the absurdity and the sudden plot twists in his stories. (Usually these are the bits people turn into 20 second clips)

A personal favourite of mine is how he explains his response to women who say "beat this up" (referring to their vaginas). He suddenly starts talking about skipping sex and just throwing uppercuts and roundhouse kicks.

But if a female asks me, I hate that guy. He disgusts me! ?

The thousands you are referring to is the War Room, and that is probably worth it after looking into it. Primarily for networking reasons.

What's wrong with that statement? You like domestic violence? lel

Celph - September 20, 2022, 6:24 pm

His content is genius really. Its got just enough normal takes in it just to get so he doesn't get labeled as completely crazy but I agree, a lot of his stuff is just off the wall for reactions. You can actually see him smile through his characters face a few times when he goes on deep rants. Its pretty easy to go after the target audience and make content that makes them feel empowered and understood. In reality, he's never had to work a real job in his life and eats from daddy's silver spoon. He was a damn good fighter though I'll give him that.

A small number of his comments are genuinely good advice; whereas, most of it was just outlandish and retarded (which I believe he mentioned was a strategy) and it blew him up and probably made him a lot of money so fair play to him haha.

Social media been filled with all them extreme feminists and stupid woke people, so when someone from the polar opposite of the spectrum came at them with a similar energy, everyone started crying and screaming while they've shoving the same type of shit ideologies on everyone for the past few years.

The funniest part is that i have only met really few feminist that could have a discussion about him without screaming or saying shit they can't back with full proof and not just half information.

Algorithm plays a big role in this, on my feed, 6-7 out of 10 videos are just the cringy basic "self improvement hustle" type videos, so a dude would say "i live most of his content". However, on the feed of a girl i know, 6-7 out of 10 videos of him are about the controversial stuff.

Also if i'm running of them pages posting his content, ofc i will only clip the juicy part and post them to get views lol.

In general idrc about him, I wouldn't care if both sides end up dying, it doesn't affect me anyways. I doubt the guy cares anyways as it's clear from what's shown that he already has money from before this trend. Can't wait to see more of his type which will piss off more feminists and woke people.

Its got just enough normal takes in it just to get so he doesn't get labeled as completely crazy but I agree, a lot of his stuff is just off the wall for reactions. You can actually see him smile through his characters face a few times when he goes on deep rants. Its pretty easy to go after the target audience and make content that makes them feel empowered and understood. In reality, he's never had to work a real job in his life and eats from daddy's silver spoon. He was a damn good fighter though I'll give him that.

The "war room" is bullshit. Even if it does have people with experience it's still bullshit, literally like HF groups claiming the same shit of "you will be talking with likeminded business men individuals" when most are acting autistic. It's just a cashgrab part. People get stuck there so they try to make the most of what they paid for, therefore the pseudo networking room happened.

Yeah.. i'm not sure about that. I've been following 5 crypto tiktokers over the past 2 years whom recently joined the War Room and regularly give feedback on their experience.. all of them have said the 5K investment was worth it and built them up even more.

I think it takes a lot of hard work even when inside the War Room, and actually, you'd get kicked from the War Room if you do not keep up to their standards.

I believe it is much more than a ground for networking but I just stuck with that as Networking is important in its self.

Personally, I will be investing that 5K into the War Room when I can comfortably do so.

And people never see the dichotomy of how racism is actually taken a lot more seriously than sexism among those who care slightly about bigotry, but no one will ever admit this, and if one brings it up they will probably get accused of racism in more woke circles than this board.

If one who already has some fame is controversial, it's gonna be posted online somewhere. Then if he "Redeems" himself by saying those funny things as you stated, he would get people to like him, because the latest generations are stupid and like him because he's funny and sexist.

So then people would see him because of the controversial, and notice that hes funny, and like him enough to buy his course when they look into him further.

He was really given an awful name through those short clips going viral around the web, but after about 20 hours of watching his own content, I really vouch for the guy. Truly inspired by his upbringing, his father's upbringing and even his rags to riches story.

Panda™ - December 3, 2022, 6:04 pm

Andrew Tate is a smart dude and that can't be denied, to be someone who blew up as fast as he did, anyone could have done it yet he has done it in a way that hasn't been seen before.

Part of his success comes from the over-the-top shit he says, yet when you try to understand what he's trying to say without the exaggeration it makes sense, at least to me it does.

I think his message has changed a little since he was banned and for best, to push men into achieving more and not being so lazy.

The only thing I don't like is the way he's selling the dream on how to make money like most gurus, but I can't really blame him, he has the views, he's monetizing it, haven't joined his "university" but making money online isn't "hard" if you really put your mind to it and give it your all, it's possible, so I guess it's best to get kids addicted to trying to explore what can be done online in that sense than just wasting their time gaming.

Mainstream media, bad split up videos stitched into one giving false narratives are the two main reasons why people dislike Andrew Tate. Lots of big words associated with his name that trigger people very quickly.

What's most fascinating to me about Tate is the following he's managed to amass. His self-help advice is either completely obvious and basic shit like "don't be lazy" or nonsense like "depression isn't real." His courses are basically get-rich-quick pyramid schemes or shit you could find for free in an e-book. On top of all that he's a blatant misogynist, hypocrite and self-important tool. He's a weak man's perspective of a strong man.

If I had to say anything positive about the guy, it would be he definitely has a talent for marketing.

Tate has no unique opinions. Many had similar but they did not become world famous. Most will get canceled very early and banned on all social media if they break rules. Somehow, Tate was allowed to be on all social medias, if not with his own account, through accounts of others. Do not believe that this can be done for everyone. In this culture war, Tate is probably controlled opposition. Apart from that, the guy is selling copywriting, amazon fba courses and other crap so he definitely doesn't care about his fans.

We're all terribly one-sided. It's not that you're his biggest fan who'd lick his toes, or his arch enemy who'd stab him between the eyes.

Even those who absolutely hate him have had to say "What if he's fucking right?" a few times. And maybe he is. But like everyone else in this world, he's never right about everything he says.

If you take away the theatrics and controversy baiting language; In other words look past the game he plays to garner attention, his basic philosophy is actually sound and idealistic. You can't deny he is a master at marketing and completely hacked the social media algorithm to blow up so quickly in such a short time.

As far as his status as an influencer of society, I see him as a net positive. You can probably do better. You can definitely do worse in terms of finding someone to emulate.

Rehashed and outdated self-help stuff. He did manage to run a good online business and found a perfect target:males feeling left out from society.

It's like an opinionated feminist ran a private group. Some actually do and make good money. Also targeted Muslim guys because they are a well-off demographic.

There's better tho: Layah Heilpern is even better and more manipulative than him but targets older audiences.

His age group is probably 16 to 25

Clanbreaker - April 23, 2023, 8:31 am

I remember agreeing with him at times on some points, but those were in extremely rare circumstances so overall I disagree with him / stay neutral. To me he's the same as a lot of content creators of his caliber, in the sense that if he says 100% nonsensical, outlandish, insane stuff, people will just call him a lunatic and move on. It's that 5% of reasonable, grounded stuff that keeps people hooked/engaged. It reminds me of something from a while ago I heard of. Let's say a person talking to someone proposes an insane idea (that the listener will obviously disagree with) and then the speaker follows it up with a less insane idea. Sure, the second idea is still technically insane but there's a fair chance the listener will agree kinda like choosing between two evils if that makes sense.

Personally, I just think life has conditioned us to think it's bad for men to speak our side of the "argument" that women have been making through Feminism for years, now, we have men like Andrew Tate and the late Kevin Samuels who more or less really only bring light to mens perspective on things.

I honestly think that alone is the only reason there's even any controversy over the guy. Some things, can be far fetched but the overall message he's conveying is entirely reasonable, and if you disagree you probably just live in a feelings based world.

Riggs - August 3, 2023, 12:06 am

I find him entertaining to listen to and agree with some of the things he says. The frustration I have is that agreeing with some of the things he says is currently considered by society as amounting to outright support, and that outright support is punishable by societal exile.

IMO, the best truthful statement Tate repeatedly makes is that masculinity is under threat and his elaborations on the wider consequences of it.

Most young men of the west today are absolute pussies. We're no longer outside hunting, fighting, or throwing spears and playing with fireworks. Instead we're sat at home simulating those lost experiences through high-res fictional movies and video games. Our short-lived attention span is now too easily captured by feelings stimulated by emotional impulse. We've been indoctrinated to take pride in suppressing our innate masculinity with the rewards consumerism offers as a coping mechanism. I think the best recent example of this is the phenomenal demand for young men to compete for purchase and consumption of the 'Prime' energy drink, and the undeserved pride associated with its reward.

Our competitive edge has been reduced by invented problems such as identity politics, covid, and equality, and invented solutions like cancel-culture, submissive compliance, and self-censorship. We're so committed to our own participation in the problem that we're now willfully blind to the effects of it.
