Thread: [\[UPDATED\] So, I have court in the morning..](#)

ENVi0US - September 22, 2022, 7:48 pm

UPDATE: I was given another court date, set for December 7th. No details were discussed on the court date related to this thread. There were well over 50 individuals who appeared for the arraignment, their only concern was getting us in and out.

I haven't opened up about this to anyone in the community, which any of you would say is a good thing because really it's no one else's business but I wanted to post here as a formal possible "see you later"..

And also to possibly get a little legal advice as far as something that's going on with one of the two charges I'm facing..

So long story short, I'm facing 2 felonies. They're both third-degree.

I hadn't bothered to check the status of my case while waiting for the court date because I knew for a fact that they have an airtight hold on me, there's no way for me to talk my way out of it, persay.

However, on the 19th of this month, there was a change to the "disposition" on one of the charges which has the comment No file/No Prosecution, and my question is does anyone know what this means?

Does this mean that they're not going to do anything with that specific charge?

On the 21st there was also a "Bond Cancellation sent to Surety" which I have no idea what that one means either..

Thoughts?..

I'm honestly fairly nervous, though this isn't my first rodeo being in trouble with the law. It's just that I have a newborn baby to take care of and support and just a pile of other things on top of it all.

Most likely means you won't be getting charged. I messaged my LEO friend to get more input.

Did you hire a lawyer? Based on some research that means they wont be filing charges but I would ask a lawyer to be sure.

I was appointed a Public Pretender, but anyone who knows, know they aren't really worth much. I wouldn't doubt that, I hired a lawyer for my case and he literally didn't do shit but tell me to plead guilty so I would imagine a public defender is even worse.

Luckily I'm eligible for expungement.

Good luck

Yeah their only concern is the money for sure, not your best interest.

Thanks for the wish of luck. I'm going to need it.

So in my county, this happens when the State Attorney doesn't file to press charges. Sometimes they are way too booked and you get lucky. I've seen where they dropped charges against someone who had meth in their pocket because they didn't have fingerprints on the bag a couple times. If there's any shred of doubt and they have too much going on, they won't pursue.

A couple friends of mine have had this happen a handful of times. Didn't even get notified that the charges were dropped. I checked the clerk of courts site for them and saw dropped. Just happened this past week with a friend who his wife claim he pushed her.

Was that the same charge that you're no longer being charged on which has Bond Cancellation sent to Surety? From what I can make out from Google I think it means the person who paid your bond might get their money back? But I really don't know I'm just trying to work it out from Google and I don't live in the USA.

From what I know from watching a lot of true crime, which is mostly about the USA....they feel they've got you on the more serious felony, so they're not going to bother with the lesser of the two felonies is my guess re why they dropped one. I suppose this can be good for you, one less charge to worry about. Unless you're really lucky and they just decided that the more serious one wasn't going to fly. Why aren't you talking to your lawyer about this? If you can't afford one and you are in the States you should be able to get a public defender sometimes called legal aid in other counties. Why are you not asking your lawyer these questions? Or is it that you're paying a lawyer and you're scared of wracking up additional costs asking?

(Sep 23, 2022 11:19 AM)phantomman55 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I am not a lawyer but I have had a couple both business law and criminal law classes.

Bond Cancellation sent to Surety means you won't be bond. You will go straight to jail and await your trial. It's just means the bond was cancelled the reason I don't know you would have to look into it to figure out why it was canceled.

The other statement about the one of the charges changing means the charge is pending. It means they intend to press those 2 charges but the one of the charges still needs to be filed. So, it looks like they're still in the process of gathering evidence and then filing for the charges.

So, that 2nd charge where you see that comment is pending. This can mean either there's a delay on their part or they might not have enough evidence to charge it so they might drop it. That's all what it means.

What are the charges that you're facing? Don't tell me shoplifting. You said it yourself they have something on you that is airtight.

Yeah I guess shoplifting is airtight these days with all the fucking cameras. Don't most HF members go down for hacking or drugs though?

That sounds typical of them. Court proceedings seem to last forever sometimes.

I remember when I was dealing with some felony charges, it actually made me appreciate every day more. I was just glad to not be in prison. Eventually, the DA just ended up dropping my charges.

Yeah, unfortunately I won't be getting lucky enough to escape from all of them. Just the one, so it seems. Although, I'm not even sure why they'd be dropping it (though I'm not complaining) considering they had more than enough evidence for it to stick.

You able to mention the charges at all or at least give a general idea? It's cool if you're not able to.

Mine was just a marijuana possession charge, but they caught me with enough to charge it as a Class C felony which is punishable by up to 15 years.

Right now I'm being charged with Larceny Grand Theft, over 750 less than 5000,

And Fraud - Swindling (Depriving a corporate business)

Right now I won't get into more details but let's chalk it up to I was very desperate and some things needed to be paid before my daughter was born and what was done had to be regardless.

Like someone else mentioned before, you seem like a person that genuinely just made a mistake and wants to fix it now. You don't seem like a bad person at all or someone that needs to sit in prison to realize they've done wrong. Fact, you didn't steal that much comparatively. Fact, it will cost the State a lot more money to incarcerate you. Florida it's about $68k annually.

They literally don't want to put you in jail because it's just so fucking expensive to do so.

Do you have a good lawyer? Also is this your first charges?

If you're lawyer hasn't told you this, I will. My guess is that you should take this time to turn your life around as hard as you can. If you're young and can show the court things like a steady job, enrollment in school, even some social volunteering it might go a long way with a Judge having enough reason to give you a chance and keep you from incarceration.

Because if you just sit around being a loser, Judge will know, he will consider you a lost cause, and put you in a cell to protect society. That's IF there isn't any mandatory sentencing for your charges. In that case same advice but you also need to target the prosecutor with the information to pray for a reduction in charges.

People get arrested for committing a crime. They go to Prison for being losers. Some see the Justice system as racist because of this. Too many poor people of color who simply don't understand the system and/or just have no planned future end up getting stiffer sentences, not because they are black, but because they are losers.

Don't be a loser. Unless of course you are one and just going to jail/prison is okay for you.

Oh, also religion. Anything you can do with your local church with volunteering will help too. Now this might seem like obvious and shallow attempts at getting favor from the court, but that doesn't matter. If you're actually helping the community it's enough.

Yes, in a previous life I was a Judge.

Yes, in a previous life I was a Judge.

I'm not religious by any means, so participation in a local church or something similar isn't something I see myself doing under any pretense as I would only feel like a hypocrite.

Also, I'm white. I don't face the problems of a "person of color" although I can admit that I face prejudice due to the amount of ink I have on my body. I'm labeled a "thug" and that's just the way it is.

It's sad the judicial system is biased to these tiny aspects, but that's the way it is and has always been. Racism lives, and it speaks even without skin color.

I'm not a loser, never have I seen myself as that way although I'm sure there's countless individuals who would say different.

Well, I know for sure I can get one of the charges reduced to a misdemeanor on the basis that my bank statement shows that I didn't receive the amount that the arrest report claims I did. The report mentioned includes the last 4 of my debit card which was involved and my statement(s) will show that I didn't actually obtain what I'm being charged for.

No. The word racism is only about skin colour. You mean bigotry or discrimination. But having tattoos was a choice so in one sense it doesn't count regarding legal discrimination. But then again to an extent it is something that you now can't change and is part of your body so in that sense if someone told you you can't have a job BECAUSE of the tattoos, a clever lawyer could try to make a case about it being discrimination. Regardless you are misusing the word racism there.

The mitigating circumstances ARE that you had a baby girl on the way. Pity that you already have a record though because if you didn't you probably would not go to jail here.

It's mitigating circumstances. The judge MIGHT care. My late husband got off a traffic conviction causing a minor car crash, because of showing proof that his first son had just been born that week. He didn't have any other incidents like that in his past and it probably DID happen because he had been driving to work at 5:30am after being woken up all night.

Maybe since it would be so expensive to put him away for so a smallish amount stolen they will take his new baby into account, and just give him a fine and probation. I'm guessing that the only thing that makes that not certain, is it's not his first offence.

I am, and it's honestly mainly because of the background itself. Being a convicted felon isn't a top match maker when it comes to employers. Unless it's construction, lol.

Smh.. and you clearly don't understand context, he said in a past life, he didn't say he was an actual judge. That was a metaphorical statement, I'm sure.

Also, yes, I came for advice. It was only for an outside outlook and opinion. Doesn't mean that anything is going to change by them saying what they've said.

However, your input here is irrelevant. You can take your saltiness from a separate thread and keep it there.
