Thread: Anyone like fishing?

Livewire - October 4, 2022, 11:05 am

I never really was into fishing until about 5 months ago, and now I try to go like once a week. It's such a thrill hooking something and fighting to reel it in. I'm progressively getting a lot better each time I go and am able to set the hook much better than when I first started.

Anyone else here enjoy it?

Lmao.

I never fished as a kid. I remember those little press-button cast poles though.

I don't mind fishing, I used to fish a lot when I was a teenager.

I throw back a lot.

Only ones I "kill," are ones I need for bait next time, or ones that are edible.

I generally go with one of my long-time friends that is very experienced with fishing and he helps me when I fuck up my rod.

Love a good Ugly Stik, stand by it as one of the best possible rods for general purpose fishing in small lakes, ponds, streams, etc. They're super durable, and easy to deal with. Throw on a decent reel and you can take that bad boy just about anywhere. I've got 3-4 that were years old when they were given to me 15 years ago and they are still holding up great!

It's a huge bummer, but it happens. Generally, if I'm not even getting any bites at one location I'll move to another after an hour or so.

The day before yesterday I was getting absolutely no bites at a dock, so I went to another one 15 minutes down the road and every time I cast my line I was pulling something up. It was a lot of small fish but they were plentiful. A friend and I collectively caught about 20 in an hour.

I actually love fishing, I've gone many times in life. It's calming, BUT LOL I'm deathly afraid of fish. So whenever I catch one I have to frantically pass the rod to someone to deal with it.

I'm not going to lie. If I'm not familiar with the fish, I will have a friend de-hook it. The main guy i go fishing with has done it his whole life so he knows what he's doing.

I bet 95% of people in this thread won't have free time to do this. but sure, I'd love to. but again, even my friends and peoples I know are busy with earnings/jobs. life is tedious. not many have the luxury of enjoying the excitement one gets while fishing.

I honestly feel like going fishing right now since I posted here. the feeling and the joy are awesome. ??

I completely get that. I'm fortunate enough to live near the coast so it's not too much of a chore to go when I have the free time.

Lmao, I grab it with gloves but have done so barricaded before. The main concern is the spines/fins, they're pretty sharp and can cut ya

Yeah some people will gut that thing and get all up in it likes it's nothing. I refuse to even so much as 1 second tap it. Someone chased me around with a huge ugly fish, then another chased me with eels and I cried and had a panic attack. Drama queen status haha

Those guys just ruined their lives and are facing felony fraud charges. It's likely they will have to pay back all prior winnings or face significant jail time.

I saw that video. They had like what 8lbs of weights?

How are they facing charges? Figured that would be a civil matter since they're only cheating in a competition?

Yeah they screwed up big time, I doubt they have the fund to pay everything back since I'm assuming they're gonna be spending alot of time behind bars for sure.

Because fraud is a criminal offense in pretty much every country with some semblance of a judicial system? Some US states even have explicit laws that directly state cheating in a fishing contest is a crime (e.g. Louisiana).

I'm pretty alright at it. Haven't gone in a couple of years. Around here you either bass fish or cat fish. I personally go for blue catfish, since they can get up to like 60 pounds. I usually spend a day tossing a net into the water and catching drums and bluegill, then I filet them, gut them, chop them in half, freeze them, and use them as bait.

I haven't caught anything crazy, but have been near people who have. It's an alright hobby, but for someone like me who has very little free time, it seems like a waste.

I've heard BlackShadow is a big fan of fishing.

I just wasn't sure that it qualified as fraud if they hadn't received a prize yet.

They only didn't get a prize because they got caught. The act of fraud was already committed by cheating.

Interesting. Would it not be attempted fraud then? I'm not sure how it works in the jurisdiction they were charged in.

There is an option for conspiracy to commit fraud, but it wouldn't make sense with video evidence of the fraud being exposed and a very high likelihood they have done this many times in the past. It would be nearly impossible to say they didn't commit fraud considering all the video evidence circulating the internet.

I see your point there.

I mean being charged with fraud doesn't mean they will be convicted of it. They might get it reduced to conspiracy as a plea or some sort, but you never know. Depends on their lawyers.

I see felony charges reduced to misd all the time as part of a plea bargain.

They definitely screwed up though. Why even cheat in a sport like fishing? It's enjoyable enough as-is.
