Thread: Disallowed Blackhat Activity

Omniscient - October 22, 2022, 4:36 pm

For now the Disallowed Blackhat Help Doc has been removed entirely. I will be rewriting site policy to reflect the changes over the next few days.

The Report reason for "Disallowed Blackhat Activity" is now simply changed to "Carding".

Members overwhelmingly want less restrictions on the content they can post.

I will update members when the new policies are in-place.

Just gonna be really clear, you post shit that gets you arrested, that's on you.

EDIT: The document has been upgraded.

<https://hackforums.net/misc.php?action=help&hid=21>

Please note it's still subject to changes.

I have also reverted the Report Reason to "Disallowed Blackhat Activity". Please be sure to only report posts that actually violate policy.

Thank you.

This should be interesting.

Kind of feels like the 2010-2015 days of HF now. We had so much people posting random methods and services.

Wow I never thought I'd see this again. Really cool to see these types of changes happening and curious how this will go. Hopefully people are smart with this.

Oh boy... Darwin award winners gala will be pretty interesting this upcoming year.

Omniscient - October 22, 2022, 5:16 pm

I will have to design some legal disclaimers into HF contracts and maybe even the registration page.

Members are celebrating but I'm very upset. This is the last thing I want to do. I think it's wrong, unethical, and immoral. But maybe I am also tired of being this sites moral compass. If people want to risk arrest and prison then that's on them. My goal is to protect HF but what's the point of protecting something that's slowly dwindling anyways.

Absolutely the biggest comments from that questionnaire was about the restrictions. You want less rules, fine, you got it.

Zexo - October 22, 2022, 5:23 pm

This wasn't an update I was expecting but I'm interested to see how it goes.

Damn. I see both pros and cons to this.

If illegal stuff is allowed, I really hope people will protect themselves more. I guess VPNs and stuff are disallowed, which is the main thing, but we will see what happens. Idk how many people will utilize the fewer restrictions for the simple fact that it'd be too easy for them to get caught because of HF's stringent VPN/Proxy "bans".

Goods - October 22, 2022, 7:04 pm

Sheesh Omni, I see where the push is coming from but, this one could be wild lmao

Biggy - October 22, 2022, 7:12 pm

I was always interested to see what the quality of HF would be like with this sort of stuff introduced. The only reason I'm signed up on other forums is for cracking related things, probably wouldn't of if it was all on HF.

It's a double edged sword really, it attracts some LQ members that only sign up for the content, but also attracts those that benefit from sharing the content.

I guess we'll never know until we try. Interested to be apart of the outcome.

Currently not on the list but I struggle with that. I'm trying to minimize the list. Part of me wants to see the type of content that comes and make a judgement call afterwards. I can always remove threads.

Did you know when I started HF I think I just basically had 3 rules? Don't spam, no porn, and act like you're older than 16. That was it.

The current list is the current policy. Like all policies it is subject to change. Don't ask me if something not on the list is disallowed. If it's not on the list, it is allowed. If you want to suggest I add something, then suggest it.

Like Murder for Hire isn't on the list, I suppose I can add that because who the fuck knows what people think right now. So yeah, I'll add that now, just in case.

NERO - October 22, 2022, 9:57 pm

I think the point has been very clear and doesn't require everyone going "Oh is this allowed", Do your thing, If its not on the list.\

If he changes his mind or doesn't like it, It will be added. Im sure you wont get closed etc if its not on the list but is added after your thread is removed. However lets be smart, He's not going to say "Yeah go ahead and do this" since it opens him up to legal issues. Plausible deniability.

Does crypto theft still fall under bank fraud? For example a thread about how to protect yourself from the latest crypto hacks/scams and how they work

I guess my real question is already answered before in this thread and that is...don't be a total idiot and everything should be cool

My other thoughts are, does this extend to the tutorials section? I'd love to make some "how to protect against" series of tutorials. Mainly focused on fraud and specifically crypto/cashout scams and hustles. They would be purely defensive

This is a really interesting change. I am both accepting and hesitant about it. If you want HF to bring in more members/traction/viral mishaps then this will do it for sure. However I think you'll be swamped in work, especially being alone now. Time will tell but overall I am excited for this change. Thank you for listening to criticism and being more open to change now. I think it'll shift HF back into a higher active member count again.

I meant scams, theft, and malware related to crypto. We should make an effort to protect crypto and help it grow, not contribute to and elevate the shady/scammy reputation that currently surrounds it.

And there's no argument for ddossing being beneficial/legal, it's just disruptive and harmful. I've never had a good time associating with ddossers, they're trigger happy and destruction follows them. Just seems like playing with fire imo.

Update makes me a little nervous. Despite my past, I make a large effort to not associate with people who still participate in stuff like this.

HF Vs it's competitors, as a business from my point of view; HF surpasses in many areas except features and restrictions on low-end SE services such as store or point-of-sale refunding, accounts and malware. Obviously as I mentioned above, banking and financial crimeware should warrant a zero-tolerance policy, should be disallowed but I don't believe B4U, Refunding, Ordering, Authentication SE services should be disallowed.

Just my opinion.

i agree with that as well i think it would bring a massive amount of users to the forum if that kind of stuff were allowed like "greyhat" type of S.E

Funny, considering using something that might actually protect your identity in this place like a VPN is still disallowed.

Meanwhile, scammers can easily bypass the restrictions by using public Wi-Fi.

If I ever had some black hat business going on I wouldn't have done it here, and never will be.

Excellent. You're not encouraged to use hf that way. Members want less restrictions and they got it. That doesn't mean hf has become a dark market. I certainly would hope that if you had a blackhat business you wouldn't advertise it here. So thank you for recognizing the intent.

No, kids with a booter subscription still use them sadly - although most aren't very good judging from the DDOS attacks my forum gets.

DDOS'ing is still an actively used target for extortion and damaging competition by rivals though. You just see it less often in games due to less Peer to Peer matchmaking.

I've ran dedicated game servers for large streamers before for them to play on while streaming and they are targetted constantly by people trying to disrupt the stream.

I think it's just the perception out there amongst much of the general public that hackers are these really dark shadowy people doing dark things for money, so I'm guessing some fools just thought this was a chance for them to find one that they could find on the internet, or that it would be asking in a place where they wouldn't get narked on.
