Hello !

The "Remote Browser" plugin currently supports default window rendering of Chrome, Edge Chromium, and Brave windows inside a non-default desktop on Win10+.

Note: "default rendering" means that no hijacking/hooks are performed inside the browser process, which could manifest as unpainted windows appearing. (Earlier i promised to add full rendering as a toggle-option (is that a word?) if requested by enough users, but it is a noisy operation which requires injection and tampering with the remote process and browser window).

So to answer your question, the plugin allows navigating to websites inside a non-default desktop on Win10+.

Thank you!

Hello !!!!

With the Ultimate Edition and Core editions both being developed using C++/ASM, they are "native" with respect to the platform (Windows).

Perhaps i misunderstood the question.

Thank you.

Hello !!!!

I failed to understand the other half of your question. DV is a Windows software, so Android is not (yet) supported unfortunately.

Thank you!

DarkVision - November 15, 2022, 10:46 am

Hello !!!

I should bump to clarify that i am currently unable to accept any crypto other than BTC, mainly because i am unfamiliar with it. Even bitcoin took a while to get my head around. Two people have started contracts specifying XMR and LTC and i don't know what to do, so please specify BTC for payment and i will accept the contract. (I will of course look into other crypto).

Thank you for understanding.

Hello !!!!

After my first comment i realized that i might have misunderstood your question regarding the protocol.

This tool can be used over any endpoints supporting reverse connections (client/server).

More than one reverse socket would be required though, as a socket pool is used for a smooth experience.

Thank you!

DarkVision - December 3, 2022, 8:35 am

Hello !!!!

Bumping to notify that a suggested "Text To Speech" feature now has been added to the tool. I also squeezed in two controls for adjusting volume and rate on the selected voice.

I would write more if i wasn't so hungry right now. lol ?

Thank you!

Ph4n70M Phr34K - December 6, 2022, 2:05 am

This is very good product worth the price, i have tested both previous versions (core and standard editions) and now ultimate edition and all features are working as advertised. worth to mention that developer is very cool and chill to deal with, he is always listening to his customers, a lot of features are being added upon request.

- + good support
- + cheap price
- + very customizable

Hello !!!!

1. If WD is a problem, you could specify custom exclusion paths during bot build. (Additionally, a new loader will be available that also has options for adding custom exclusions for WD. Support in the loader for alternative processes is under development).

2. DV has three options for reverse lookup:

2.1. Hardcoded Ip-Address/Port.

2.2. DNS/Port (For example: username.moo.com).

2.3. Reverse lookup via textfile on webserver (i.e place a textfile containing ip:port or domain:port on a web location and build the bot to download the file from URL, resolve, and reverse connect).

2.4. I might add pastebin as requested.

3. The unlimited alternative delivers a tool that works without limitations and available updates are granted for three months.

4. If you are unable to PM perhaps i could provide my email?.

Hope this helped.

Thank you!

how many clients have this power to hold?

DarkVision - January 3, 2023, 10:18 pm

Hello, and happy new year !!!!

Bumping to inform that i have been away for a while due to broken development system and murderous toothache before Christmas and no dentist available anywhere. D:

The current UAC bypass has become quite ineffective, so i am now working on replacing it with the somewhat more up to date method with "mock folder" / "sideloading" approach. That method will also be incorporated into the loader.

Until next time... ?

Sorry for the delay, i have had some issues getting the dev system back on track after the Christmas breakdown.

Your question is tricky to answer, similar to "how long is a string?".

As you may be aware, with a finite number of socket descriptors in a system, and the fact that a (non polling) rat usually requires a small pool of sockets per connection on the receiving end to make a "smooth" experience, that kind of technical restriction will eventually kick in. (The reverse proxy for example works optimally with a pool of pre connected reverse sockets).

Hope this helped.

For quite some time people have requested demo videos of DarkVision RAT Ultimate Edition, and of the "REMOTE BROWSERS" feature in particular. Making videos is not my specialty but i have managed to spit out an animated GIF to showcase one of the three supported browsers in action, namely Google Chrome. The GIF is located at the end of my first post in this thread.

Hope you like it for now. ?

Hello!

I decided to edit this post to avoid potential problems.

1. DarkVision RAT (any edition) is not based on or deriving from any other software.
2. DarkVision RAT (any edition) contains no copy/pasted code.
3. I agree. $60 is waaaay too cheap. :-)

I hope this clarified any misconceptions. ?

He even logged on and responded to people in this thread, ones posted after my post saying I opened a contract, and he didnt reply to my post, accept the contract or even PM.

I may have dodged a bullet here. If its this hard to find a person in their own thread to sell the program to me, imagine how hard it will be to get support once they have my money.

Hello!

It was not possible to approve your contract because the terms in it, along with the email sent to the site, were contradictory.

PROBLEM #1:

In your email to the website (and also in your post in this thread), you referred to the product as a LOADER, which is something I don't have for sale.

PROBLEM #2:

Your contract specified LTC as your preferred currency. As i explained in this very thread, BTC is the only crypto currency that i can make use of where i live.

PROBLEM #3:

Your contract specified that you wanted a "lifetime" license for the software. However, the description in this thread clearly states that the tool works WITHOUT TIME LIMIT and includes free available updates for three months and that registered users are eligible for additional heavily discounted updates beyond that time. "Lifetime" is something completely different.

CONCLUSION:

Please understand that I have no desire to go back and forth with you on this matter. No money has been transacted between us. This is a paid marketing thread dedicated to the software itself and is not intended for pointless tirades that will lead nowhere. If you have anything else to say, please forward it to me via PM, and it will be addressed appropriately.

I feel compelled to end this post by stating that your derogatory insinuation and claim that I would not fulfill my obligations towards customers are completely groundless and unfair. I always aim to deliver the software promptly after confirmed payment (within 24 hours at the latest) and provide support to the best of my abilities within reason.

Best regards.

Hello !!!!

I really appreciate your offer; however, I must respectfully decline. Accepting various crypto is not the problem. Instead, the main reason for currently restricting payments to BTC mostly boils down to being limited to finding people in the same country who also use a particular online wallet (bank) that offers decent prices. Terribly difficult where i live.

Thanks for the gesture tho! ?

Great project, does WD Persistence work? Does DarkVision work on Windows 11 ? Does the Hidden Browser work well and clone the browser with cookies, etc.? Are there any plugins available ? Do you recommend a particular crypter ?

For your crypto swap problem, why don't you go through an external service (no-KYC exchange) offering to swap different crypto such as XMR>BTC / ETH>BTC by writing that the fees are at the charge of the customer? it adds a lot of privacy-security and especially it increases your customer base.

Hello !

Q: "Does DarkVision work on Windows 11 ?"

A: Yes. (No major difference from Win10).

Q: "does WD Persistence work?"

A: In the context of this question, whether it "works" depends on the specific circumstances of the system. By enabling injection and melting, the code will be disconnected from the executable on the disk. On Win11 it is evident that an immediate injection of the code for elevation and WD exclusions into an -already running- process is very effective. Upcoming (at least near future) releases will include more options for already running processes.

Q: "Does the Hidden Browser work well and clone the browser with cookies, etc.?"

A: A checkbox for enabling cloning is available. Check out the gif at the end of the first post for a "showcase" of the remote browser feature. (Note: MSEdge is temporarily disabled on Win11).

Q: Are there any plugins available ?

A: Third-party plugins are not possible for the moment. Since the plugins are not completely standalone from the bot, incorporating third-party-developed plugins into the project would require a substantial part of the code to be open-sourced.

Q: "Do you recommend a particular crypter ?"

A: I am legally barred from recommending third party software outside of my control (in relation to this project).

Q: "For your crypto swap problem, why don't you go through an external service (no-KYC exchange) offering to swap different crypto such as XMR>BTC / ETH>BTC by writing that the fees are at the charge of the customer? it adds a lot of privacy-security and especially it increases your customer base."

A: Thank you for the advice. However, my main problem still boils down to finding the right person willing to transfer to my bank using a specific payment option.

I hope this helped. :)

Best regards.

Hello!

Currently, only microphone capture (listen) and recording is supported. However, people have suggested the addition of outgoing microphone audio, which has been added to the TODO list.

What's missing is the ability to sign the infected.

For example - 127.0.0.1 - Robert Home

Is it possible to add this functionality

Also noticed that the wrong country is shown. I have a VDS in the Netherlands, but in the program shows the U.S.

Hello!

As you are not a contracted user, I request that you refrain from posting negative vouch-like judgments or groundless bug reports in this thread. Even with a contract, I would still only consider constructive criticism and questions that make any sense. This being said, i am compelled to address the comment that the wrong country is shown, it's not a bug, but rather a reflection of the current regional setting in the system on which the bot is running.

The first post in this thread (the image) explains, among other things, how to forward technical support questions.

Hello!

Q: Does it has DNS backup / multiple DNS adding option ?

A: There is support for static ip, dynamic host, and resolving ip from textfile via web location.

Q: Can I load and Unload all plugins with a single click ?

A: There is an option to encrypt/store all modules with one click. This will decrypt and memory map any selected module on the fly with no additional action required when a manager window is opened.

The video you mention must pertain to some other release because the UE has no videos yet.

Thank you!

I think that it shouldn't be an issue.

You can always pay 15$ for a "thread sales tag" and as far i remember, it would give you unlimited edits before it expire, its 30 days i think.

Same for sticky thread or vendor status, should give you unlimited edits.

Yes, i started to pay for stickies but paused for a while because i imagined that the queue (slots) and waiting time would be about two weeks as the previous times. Gotta hit in the right moment, lol.

The images in my thread broke because the host cancelled the account based on groundless rumours.

Fortunately, the users of DV will be unaffected because the tool keeps working even if the host is down. :)

Hello!

The remote browser module executes the selected browser in a non default desktop. The current release has an option for cloning the browser profile of the current user. Whether cookies are included in this context or not depends on how the browser is started. (Cloned or uncloned).

Yes, and for several different browsers. Everything currently works very well in a very, very "discreet" way. ?

I'd like to make it clear that DarkVision's aim is to be as stealth as possible. There's absolutely nothing on the market today that can beat DarkVision RAT Ultimate Edition v1.7.

You're right, I wasn't accurate. I respect your work on the HF.net community and especially in the malware group. You have a lot to share with the community.?

Nevertheless, in my opinion, the option is currently available on DarkVision RAT Ultimate Edition v1.7.

You have a similar option that lets you access the documents and open and monitor the file in a very "discreet" way. Look again, DarkVision RAT Ultimate Edition v1.7 is complete.

Hello!

The remote browser runs inside its own "hidden" desktop object. I don't like using the word "hidden" as it carries negative connotations in certain contexts. Useful for activists tho.

Hello!

For servers running on real systems I have never seen this myself and have not received any reports describing what is mentioned. However, I have noticed that screenshots captured from virtualized environments might cause distortions.

Of course, any issues will be thoroughly looked into. As this thread is not intended for support related questions, please send me as much info as possible (currently) via PM and describe the context (Any virtual machine, Operating system, etc).

EDIT: I forgot to mention that DV currently captures the PRIMARY screen. I postulate that what you describe as 'cutting off' MIGHT be the result of a setup where another monitor object is causing portions of the screen to have negative coordinates. (A virtual screen would be at play in such as situation). If this is the case, I would not call this a bug. The TODO list actually contains a note for multiple monitor support, so hang in there...

When the website is relocated to a new host, any issue can be forwarded to the ticket system, until then please resort to PM.

Thank You!

Hello!

Well, a virtualized environment is just that: virtualized. The optimal environment for most if not all software is, of course, a real system. So the short answer is that it depends on the current environment and system.

Thank You!

Nope, it is being sold publicly, thats one of the reasons why it can not bypass any AV by itself. You need a proper obfuscation to achieve that.

Hello!

I could answer: If the VM does it's job properly you should expect a seamless experience.

However, I am not able to answer your specific question because it would be impossible and dishonest to guarantee an "authentic" real-system experience for every possible configuration of Windows Server Edition under the sun, for example. I can only stand by my previous answer, which is that it depends on the environment. DV has since its inception been deployed in various contexts, but is of course first and foremost aimed at and tested on real systems, anything else would be backwards.

Regardless, any capable/competent person who insists on cramming a VM (or something else) between the bot and the client should be able to do so without any problems.

Sorry for not being able to answer your specific VM question.

Yes it's a peculiar comment.

Someone (a troll?) sent an email and pointed out how immoral it was to have the name of the unload file set to "TITANIC.TXT" and implied that I was "capitalizing" from the recent Titanic related submersible disaster and its loss of lives.

Let me set the record straight regarding this in case anyone wonders. The name "TITANIC.TXT" has been used to unload the bot in test mode since the inception of the original (now paused) 2019 project, which predates the recent Titanic related submersible disaster by years. So, no capitalizing or diminishing any disaster has taken place.

However, in order to prevent further misunderstandings that might offend or provoke, I intend to change the filename to 'UNLOAD.TXT' in future releases.

That's the end of that chapter. ?

Hello!

DV has a -regular- remote desktop and a remote browser module running inside a non default desktop.

I believe this question has been answered a couple of times before. Additionally, I mentioned somewhere in the same context that I planned to create a full blown hvnc as a standalone product, separate from DV. The reason behind this decision would be to prevent the price of DV from skyrocketing. (As you may be aware, a mind blowing amount of time and effort is required to implement REAL responsiveness for the elements in an "empty" hvnc desktop, resulting in a much higher price).

I hope this helped.

(My eyes are tired so i might have to edit any peculiarities or spelling errors later).

Thank You for showing interest in the software!

Good question. Please hold on while I dash to the remote administration department to check.

Elevator music....

Phew! Okay, now I am back, and here is my conclusion: Judging from the lack of spiderwebs on the desks and keyboards, it appears that it is being actively developed, and the source code is guarded by our cat lying on top of the stationary computer, so everything should be well. ?

Hello!

All I can say regarding crypters is that I have my own private runtime stub, which works well for all sorts of purposes. Beyond that, I am barred from endorsing third party tools, software, methods, or other means that could be interpreted as actively promoting activities that are outside the scope of my control.

It's around 400KB for the STUB with all the options/protectations activated (as well as Windows bypass methods and one direct DNS connection.)

DarkVision RAT UE 1.7 have a very good password recovery plugin-implemented, Download/Execute as well as browser history scraper/Cloner. For me it works well, you can implement a keylogger in real time and of course catch all logs. On the other hand, there are no options to receive the logs periodically on an FTP / SMTP server for example.?

Next release v1.8 will feature FTP delivery of keystroke logs, among other things. (Insecure, but hey!)

IMPORTANT!

Due to the unusually long delay between v1.7 and the next release v1.8, all users with v1.7 who has not received any update will be granted two or three updates including v1.8 even if your update license expired. Just hang in there until v1.8 is made available. I hope this will be to your satisfaction.

I was wondering, does this rat work with windows 11? I mean if it ran on win 11, would it connect? I'm ok if some of the features not working as long as it can get connected with some basic features also, could you please let me what kind of crypter (I would appreciate it if you could recommend me one) I should look for?

Hello!

The recommended method is to start a contract and fill in the required fields: terms, amount, TID, and UID.

If, for some reason, you are unable to use the contract method, then send an email to darkvisionrat@proton.me and request a Bitcoin payment address. After the payment is confirmed, wait for the download information to be sent to your email address.

I hope this helps.

(Aug 12, 2023 02:02 PM)radioham Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I want to buy a VPS server for RAT. I would like to know what are the minimum requirements for the DarkVision client?

VPS is not a requirement for deploying DV so there aren't really any "minimum requirements". I am also legally prohibited from recommending any third party service.

However, technically speaking; when putting something between the bot and gui, be it a proxy or something else, the following should be kept in mind.

Unlike the static http polling-bots that only require one connection to pass through for fetching a command from the http server, DV and similar software instead utilize a custom (non-HTTP) protocol and a pool of preconnected sockets to minimize the waiting time (connection overhead during TCP handshake) every time a command is "issued" from the client/gui. The benefits of a socket pool becomes particularly evident when using the reverse SOCKS proxy - the greater the number of preconnected pool sockets, the more seamless the experience.

The current size of the DV socket pool is six socket descriptors. Therefore, users putting additional services between the bot and the GUI should allow for the passthrough of the required number of full TCP KEEPALIVE connections.

While DV bots will connect to whatever endpoint is specified in the configuration, it all boils down to the external service being used (Proxy, VPS, RDP, etc.) and the restrictions they impose on their users.

I hope this helped!

Hello!

I assume that you have looked at the first image in this thread.

Writing persistence values to the HKLM registry hive requires elevation on a normal default Windows installation. DV has three options for attempting elevation (during binary start, and two during connection).

DarkVision - September 13, 2023, 2:32 pm

DarkVision RAT v1.9 is available.

- + Fulfilled request to add Thunderbird email client to password recovery (Current user IMAP. POP3 comes later).
- + Added Vivaldi web browser to password recovery (Current user/Web logins).
- + Changed to more convenient .TXT format for delivered keystroke logs.
- + Internal changes not visible to the user.

An "Auto Update Notification" feature will be incorporated in the software shortly. Until then, click "About", "Website", and request update from the email address specified at the bottom of the page.

Thank You!

Hello!

My somewhat dated signature-image says 7,8,10, meaning that Win7 and 8 was supported back then. However, the main focus is to support Windows 10/11 and "onwards" (if that is the correct word).

(Sep 17, 2023 08:33 AM)m0hx Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) that's weird, 32-bit should run on 64 by default :/ thanks btw.

I beg to differ. It's not weird at all but rather common sense.

If the bitness is of concern, fetch the appropriate binary using a 32 bit loader instead, and the problem is solved.

It is definitely not a bug.

Best regards!

(Sep 17, 2023 01:30 PM)m0hx Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) most 32-bit exe's work on 64-bit PC's... i dont see why not.. i mean check ur process list and u'll see some. I just don't understand how 32-bit only work on 32-bit pc's ...since 64-bit pcs have backwards computability with 32-bit anyways i was just asking cuz im having issue crypting 64-bit files and then elevating uac ... idk how to crypt them. they work fine but the elevation there's issue. idk.

thank you for your response and waiting on how 32-bit are still only supporting 32-bit machines. Regarding the bitness, indeed, 32-bit binaries work on 64 bit operating systems, and DarkVision's 32-bit binaries DO work on 64-bit systems HAD I NOT BEEN ENFORCING strict bitwise correspondence between binaries and systems for the sake of maintaining a certain level of compatibility and stability. After all, it is commercial software. If i were to make it easy for myself by cramming the most commonly used, but unstable, techniques for injecting 64-bit code into 64-bit processes from a 32-bit process space, then i might as well tell my users that "I don't really care if the software you purchased works or not." I don't want to go that route with a commercial tool.

To clarify my position regarding the bitness: Enforcing the bitness is just out of consideration for the user of the software, and it is worth repeating again that if bitness is of concern, just deploy a 32-bit loader which will fetch the right binary according to the current system.

Regarding crypting.

I assume that you are referring to another RAT than DarkVision here, because both binaries are easily crypted with a properly developed tool. I am however legally prohibited from getting involved in other peoples crypting endeavors, so i must therefore refrain....

I hope this helped.

Best regards!

Hi there, I am very interested in purchasing the tool, just 1 question beforehand:

Can I view the desktop remotely in real-time and control the mouse (same as team viewer for example)? If yes, lets imagine that there is a software that usually does not run if team viewer is enabled because it detects it, do you think it will open with your RAT installed while desktop is being monitored in real-time?

I know it may be a hard question with too many unknowns, but I basically need to open a program that detects team viewer and other similar programs and gives an error if it detects them.

Hello!

All questions have already been answered earlier, but to repeat.

1. As stated in the ad: The tool works without time limitations and the license restricts the duration for updates.
2. The remote browser runs inside a non-default desktop, so yes.
3. As mentioned prior, DV has a regular remote desktop module. Including HVNC with FULL rendering/responsiveness for every object would skyrocket the end price of DV, due to the time and work involved. It will instead be released as a standalone product with a price that reflects the effort.

Thank You!

Hello!

It is recommended that you refer to the first image in this thread for details.

The software itself operates without time limitations. The license only restricts the duration for granting updates. That period is currently three months. Beyond the three months you can extend the update period for a small fee of $20.

Hello!

I am afraid that i am legally prohibited from endorsing tools/means that might be used to facilitate gray installations.

However, i am entitled to express my personal opinion and experience, which is that DV is effectively crypted with a properly implemented stub. (Technically speaking, and assuming that you are an activist for good purposes).

Every time i respond to this question, people request that i sell my private stub, but that is not possible since it would no longer be private.

Hello!

Based on the FACT that DarkVision is easily crypted using a properly developed builder/stub, including my own, i must say that the whole premise of your request is completely backwards. If you have chosen to invest your last money in third party tools (crypters) that are outside the scope of my responsibility, then the common-sense approach in your situation would be to contact the ones who are responsible for those tools and request a refund from them.

As was explained in the previous post, for anyone who wonders: This thread will answer relevant questions strictly related to the software itself. This thread is NOT intended for technical support for third party software beyond my involvement. Please forward bug reports and support questions either to HF/PM or Email.

Your license is still valid for granted updates, so check back regularly. Next version will have the update check reinstalled for convenience.

I hope this helped.

Less than one hour elapsed between your PM and your thread post, so factors like time zones make immediate replies unlikely.

That said.

Your issue of concern was already addressed accordingly in the previous post. I never sent any duplicate explanation via PM for the simple reason that your public claim regarding the functionality of the software deserved a likewise public response.

Hello!

The unfair complaints that you referred to regarding the cryptability of DV have also been addressed and replied to in this very thread, but perhaps you overlooked them. Here, i repeat the gist of the situation.

Due to a legal agreement, i am not in the position to endorse or namedrop any third party means or tools, such as crypters, in relation to DV. It ensures that i am only responsible for my own creations and code that is within my control. However, this position doesn't change the fact that DV is easily and efficiently crypted with a properly implemented private builder/stub.

Best regards. ?

Incorporating a decent HVNC in DV with interactivity for all (or near) objects on the screen requires time and effort that would affect the price of the tool (DV) in (in my opinion) negative way. Instead, that feature will be released as a standalone product.

Currently, DV offers a regular remote desktop and a remote browser module.

Thank You.

Q: "How effective is DVrat?"

A: That is impossible to say without knowing your specific goals. All sorts of people, including activists with good intentions, have deployed DV with great success, and it ultimately depends on the knowledge and experience of the individual.

Q: "Does it require additional tools to work properly, like FUD software, or can it suffice alone?"

A: Without understanding the meaning of "require" and "properly" in the context of your question, it is difficult to say. DV is aimed to function out of the box as a remote administration tool. Depending on your specific goal, an extra layer of protection might be beneficial.

Q: "Is there a document that explains everything and provides the steps needed for a successful implementation, along with things to consider?"

A: A help document in PDF format will most likely be incorporated in future releases.

Thank You.

Hello!

DV wasn't exactly designed with test cheating in mind.

Considering that cheating on tests (at a higher level) is a prosecutable offense in some countries, it would be "wise" to use a solution that is dedicated and tailor-made for that particular task (allowing a third party to assist with the test over the network). I actually have a skeleton for such a project, but moral qualms hold me back. (I might release it tho, so please come back in mid 2024).

Thank You.

The changes in v1.11 is mostly internal. (V1.11 was intended to feature the instant HTTP password recovery in the bot, but it was necessary to make an adjustment in v1.11, so instead the instant HTTP password recovery will be available in v1.12 provided that no additional adjustment has to be made before).

Hello!

Your conclusion is incorrect. If you look at the GUI you will notice that it says "Installation" or "Unload" for folder options. The folders are used differently depending on which options are enabled for injection/melting. No installation is forced. It's 100% optional.

So, look at the GUI again and you will notice how the folders are used.

(Also DV is easily cryptable with a -properly- implemented crypter. That said, i am not able to endorse any third party tools).

Please avoid posting tech support questions in this thread. Instead forward any technical questions to the contact info in the beginning of the thread.

You are making it hard to sell your own product.

Hello!

Q: "Do we have to make a contract?"

A: Initiating a contract is recommended. It used to be mandatory, but it is now optional, if i am not egregiously mistaken about forum rules. Those who are unable or unwilling to start a contract can request a payment address from the email shown in the first post in the thread.

Q: "Make button where we can buy the product, are you selling or what?"

A: Yes, i am selling it, and the button is located in the same place as before when you started the previous contract.

"You are making it hard to sell your own product."

I beg to differ. The premise that i am paying for the exposure of this thread should indicate that i am not intentionally making it difficult for people to purchase the software. After scouring through the incoming emails and finding your address, i assume that your contract was unintentionally disregarded because the message you sent gave the impression that you preferred the latter payment option, one that did not involve the use of a contract.

Best regards.

Quote: "Weird user, OP refuses the contract and ignores me completely when i want to buy his product."

As i mentioned earlier, the very premise that i am paying for exposure of this thread would indicate to anyone with common sense that i am not refusing, avoiding, or trying to make it difficult to purchase my software.

YOU approached ME by first dumping your negative experience with some third party creation on me, insinuating that i am a scammer. On top of that, you then initiated an invalid contract and wonder why i am not interested in accommodating the request. I told you to leave me alone. And now this.

Quote: "Deal with caution."

Why? We haven't made any deal. How did i rip you off?

Quote: "I do not recommend buying from him."

Why? You haven't bought anything from me and never will. How did i rip you off?

The questions are rhetorical because i don't want you to exhibit any more of your tirades in this thread.

No money has been involved, so please stop acting like i owe you anything.

Your post is nothing but a personal attack, slander, and sales bashing.

AND, IF SALES BASHING REALLY IS DISALLOWED HERE, THEN YOU ARE THE BIGGEST OFFENDER.

Hello!

Well, i wouldn't say that Windows 7 is a prioritized system. For some features in particular, such as remote browser, differences in rendering would make it quite cumbersome to maintain compatibility between systems, which takes the fun out of the whole thing, at least to a degree.

Hello!

I always welcome reasonable complaints, but regarding the transaction fee issue, you seem to be barking up the wrong tree. Allow me to address your message.

Q: "Why You are not using a non custodial Wallet that Support Multiple Crypto Coins ? Like Exodus,Coinomi and many more"

A: I am using several different wallets for different purposes. As i explained, due to my very special banking situation in my location, only ONE option exists when converting to fiat.

Q: "I have read your full thread and many people have Complained about BTC transaction Fees but you don't care about their Complain."

A: How do you know that i don't care? Your statement that i don't care about such complaints is pretty unfair, given that transaction fees are related to various factors outside my control, such as the current state of the mempool, which has been congested recently resulting in higher fees.

Q: "If i pay you 60$ with BTC then I have to pay more than half of a month update for Transaction Fee."

A: I see your situation. However, on those $60, i must pay 25% sales tax and additional 50% income tax on top of that, meaning that the only winner is the government.

So, at least for the transaction fees, there isn't much to be done, sadly.

MySadness - December 25, 2023, 9:09 am

Can you use Coinbase account address ?

May be they have less transaction fees from coinbase to coinbase.

Hello!

Firstly, i am legally prohibited from endorsing/naming third party software in relation to DVRAT.

Your claim is unfair, and i must contradict your conclusion (based on your reading of 25 pages/posts in the thread) that "most people" have problems crypting DVRAT binaries when, in fact, the bulk user base of several thousand users is outside the HF community and not posting in the thread. Crypting DVRAT binaries is not and has never been a problem.

It is, on the other hand, a fair conclusion that not all crypters are cast in the same mold. Some crypters are poorly implemented; others are not.

So, let me clarify once again that DVRAT is EASILY and EFFICIENTLY crypted using a PROPERLY implemented stub, preferably a private one.

Best regards.

How do i make use of a RAT if am not allowed to crypt it?

Then why not make it FUD or simply make it flexible to crypt with HF crypters
You need to give me solutions and you must fix crypting issue about this program or refund me,

You can not come here with a new project and then asking me to dumped my 7 years old crypter

However i later got 2 more crypter and is still not compatible

Dear, Old Friend

I am a School Teacher and a father.I use This Native Remote Administration Software For a nobel Reason.

I use This helpful RAT to monitor my young Children and Some of My Favorite Students with the permission of their parents.

Please,Allow me to use your Updated version for $20 and send me the BTC Address.
I need the updated Version because older version's connection is very unstable.

Please, Check my Video what I have send you in your PM/Convo and mail .
It's Real.I own a licence key what I have proved in the video with activate freshly install DarkvisionRAT.

I have purchased your RAT from your website.I do not use this Software for making money.My salary is not very high enough to buy a newone with $60.Please, accept my request for a nobel Reason.

Kind regards

It will be great help for a Father and a Teacher If you allow me to use updated version of your Software.

This feature will help me a lot to monitor my Children and favorite students.
Please, Consider my situation.

(Jan 4, 2024 02:00 AM)DarkVision Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Hello!

Firstly, i am legally prohibited from endorsing/naming third party software in relation to DVRAT.

Your claim is unfair, and i must contradict your conclusion (based on your reading of 25 pages/posts in the thread) that "most people" have problems crypting DVRAT binaries when, in fact, the bulk user base of several thousand users is outside the HF community and not posting in the thread. Crypting DVRAT binaries is not and has never been a problem.

It is, on the other hand, a fair conclusion that not all crypters are cast in the same mold. Some crypters are poorly implemented; others are not.

So, let me clarify once again that DVRAT is EASILY and EFFICIENTLY crypted using a PROPERLY implemented stub, preferably a private one.

Best regards.
Thanks for your reply.

Here's the answer I got from a fairly well-known guy here who makes private crypts:

i have tested darkvision 3 months ago it had install by default and there wasn't an option to disable it and that triggers WD on runtime and because of that i don't crypt it if that install can be disabled then yes i will crypt it

So my question is, is there any way to disable install by default?

Hello!

"Is there any way to disable install by default?"

Yes, there is.

However, before proceeding, please read the initial post in this thread. This thread is intended for my software. It is not intended as a dumping ground for poorly implemented crypters over which i have no control. My recommendation to anyone experiencing issues with poorly implemented crypters is to post their complaints in the thread dedicated to the respective product. I am not sure if the "fairly well-known guy" you mentioned has such a thread.

Regarding the FALSE claim made by the "fairly well-known guy":

You have been lied to. Installation is NOT mandatory. By selecting injection/melting/wiping, the installation step is OMITTED, and the bot is injected into the selected networking process. This fact should be self explanatory by simply looking at the GUI options; a detail overlooked by the "fairly well-known guy". The option to provide names for the folder and the bot is simply to enhance control over which location to use if or when the bot is unloaded.

With that detail out of the way.

Much bigger fish than the "fairly well-known guy", including serious political activists, have successfully deployed DV without any problems with crypting. My own private stub also handles this without problems. I think that it is reasonable to expect that anyone engaging in activities requiring a crypter should also be capable of crypting the binaries using a carefully crafted stub from a competent programmer.

So, when my software works as advertized and some third party crypter cripples the functionality, then it's hardly my fault. All crypters aren't cast in the same mold, and i couldn't care less about the "fairly well-known guy" whose lack of comprehension, to be honest, evokes kindergarden vibes.

The fact remains: DarkVision RAT binaries are EASILY and EFFICIENTLY crypted with a PROPERLY (YES, PROPERLY) implemented stub. ?

Thank you for letting me clarify this.

Best regards.

Hello!

I feel compelled to reiterate that, due to legal reasons, i am not in a position to endorse or name third party products in relation to the software. While some may not accept this position, it is important to stress that anyone engaging in activities that require a crypter must also be capable of crypting their binaries.

That said, crypting DV is not and has never been a problem with a properly implemented stub.

1) Does it have any disconnection, network issue, other errors . . . fault tolerance mechanism, error handling? Because main problem with RATs is losing clients (without AV detection issue).

2) Keyloggers (online, offline) only works on 64 bit system?

3) Does keylogger collect clipboard data

4) As I read your thread all commands are executed in memory so runtime detection should be good, is it so?

Hello!

It is quite challenging to answer questions about "error handling" and "fault tolerance" without having more details about what you actually mean by that.

Please refer to the first post in the thread for information regarding what is or isn't in the tool.

Although DV carries no "features" in the bots, and everything is mapped remotely, "runtime detection" still boils down to individual capabilities, preparation, and of course, the security context.

Without knowing which rats you have used, i can inform you that DV has keepalive enabled on all sockets, meaning that a period of inactivity won't put the sockets in an idle state.

Hello!

As a principle, tech support questions aren't handled here, so i have decided to create a text file with basic guidelines.

While i am at it, though, the default settings are as follows:

1. Create the "upload" folder in the document root of the server. (Relocatable by script mod).
2. Place the basic "upload.php" in the document root. (Can be changed by script mod).
3. Place "PWD.EXE" somewhere on the web (name can be changed and direct download link required).

BUILD the bot.

Again, everything is relocatable through modifications of the upload script, but i won't be going into that.

Spawn the bot and it will simply pull the password recovery stub from the web, memory map it in the selected process, which will carry out the password recovery. This approach was optimal to avoid bloating the bot with quite extensive password recovery code.

VERY IMPORTANT!

With an option to skip delivering duplicate logs, it's inevitable that some users will enable the option and still expect duplicates to be delivered. That said, if the option to not deliver duplicate logs is in effect, identical logs are only delivered once. Users who want logs to be delivered each time the bot spawns, for example while testing in a VM, they can either enable the option to deliver duplicate logs OR simply update or "reinstall" the bot and respawn the bot.

In a real-world context, this won't be a problem.

Finally, this feature has been extensively tested before release, so no need to worry.

Best regards.

THERE IS NO CRYPTING ISSUE!

Let me repeat what i already explained: Anyone who engages in activities that require crypting should also be competent enough to crypt their binaries without relying on someone else to do it for them. I am also not in any way obliged to hand over my private stub, especially not to people who use a pirated copy of the software.

I will give my honest review about this Rat. After testing xworm v5.4 and other rats, it is by far the best and most stable. The silent exploit to gain administrator rights is excellent and almost invisible. I have a Silver RAT 1.0 license which costs 900 bucks, but I prefer to stick with DarkVision. It would just be necessary to think about adding a hidden RDP and a ransomware, and I think it would be the best on the market at this price.. Thanks

REALLY?

First of all, the post in the thread clearly states:

I tried to deliver your software to no avail and even created an additional email address just to ensure that you received what you paid for. Now you are trashing me publicly trying to dump the blame on me.

It's also very telling how you choose to trash me publicly instead of sending a PM with your message.

Contact darkvisionrat@proton.me and provide an address for a refund.

Without having ANY blame in this matter, supported by message transactions:

Announcement!

Due to technical reasons, it has become more and more tedious to manage the code handling the current license solution. A decision was therefore made to adjust the licensing code to simplify a lifetime model. That said, severe violations of the agreement, such as cracking, sharing, etc., will not grant any updates.

BEGINNING MARCH 22, 2024:

ALL NEW CONTRACTS ARE GRANTED LIFETIME ACCESS TO NEW RELEASES OF THE SOFTWARE.

Questions can be forwarded to darkvisionrat@mail.com

(I might repeat this announcement later).

You should consider to add more crypto payment options, sending $60 in bitcoin costs $50-60 fee

You could add for example Matic on Polygonchain, sending funds is less then a cent fees

Hello!

Firstly, i am legally prohibited from endorsing third-party tools and services.

That said, without endorsing anything, crypting is done with a REAL crypter.

Crypters aren't all cast in the same mold, as some people seem to think. Some crypters work great, while others are pieced together with copy/pasted garbage.

I don't sell my own runtime private stub. Several crypters work great with DV, but for the reason explained i won't be naming any.

If you want to crypt your binaries, any PROPERLY implemented stub will do.

I hope this answered your question.

Honest Review of Dark Vision RAT:

When i purchased it i was worried, as i never used contracts before... then i got my product pretty quickly (less than a day but max is 24 hours as darkvision said)

When i first loaded the rat it was kind of wierd, no feature worked and turns out its a plugin based rat so i need to enable the plugins which i wanna use.

when i tried enabling them it just did not work and i thought i got scammed but then i fixed the issue by reinstalling the rat and wow, i got to say this is a great rat.

I will be using it to manage the computers in my home and this is a wonderful software with many tools, i would absolutely recommend DarkVision RAT.

Yes, the plugin architecture can be confusing initially, but most people react positively once they realize that plugins are transferred automatically by the local GUI across the network and seamlessly memory mapped inside the current networking process on the remote system, requiring no manual handling.

Hello!

I am not able to discuss or endorse third-party tools and services. This is due to legal reasons.

A crypter is not "required" as the RAT works as advertised on its own, but technically speaking, any properly implemented runtime stub works, including my own private one.

"Properly" in this context implies that the stub performs the required internal setup of the payload.

Hello!

I can't comment on any particular product.

But i can say with confidence that whether or not something bypasses something else is highly related to the technical knowledge of the individual. A highly competent person with lots of experience is, of course, more likely to "pull it off" than a person with less technical knowledge and experience. This principle also holds true in redteaming scenarios where the payload is "tweaked" to bypass the security measures.

After using Dark Vision for around 3 weeks, I can say it's a solid product and is worth the money. You get fast responses via email aswell and he's pushed an update out during my 3 weeks which is also nice.

Hoping to see cookie recovery in the future.

Hello!

Thank you for expressing such positive feedback. I can assure you that your kind words are greatly appreciated.

And yes, the cookie recovery will follow after the "instant downloader" feature that is expected to be added shortly.

Firstly this product works like magic. That being said i have an issue now.

Sometimes not always when i open the software and turn on my port, my connections come in but this time my 30 connections can count up to 30 then disconnects connects again just not stable.

The other time it gave up to 1k connections and my connections are not up to 40 so it is disturbing me please what can i do.

Regards

Hello!

When you purchased the tool, you could read that this thread isn't intended for tech support, and that bug reports should be forwarded via PM or email. The reason for this is that bug reports not established by facts may mislead visitors of the thread. Since i don't agree with your report, i feel compelled to reciprocate by addressing your issue publicly as well.

1. DarkVision RAT uses completion ports to facilitate maximum speed and connectivity on it's reverse connections, which is basically the most efficient approach for handling connections between endpoints.
2. All sockets in the pool have keepalive mode enabled to prevent the socket handles from entering idle states. This measure ensures that all sockets are responsive even after long periods of inactivity.
3. I am of course sorry to hear that you experience issues. But, since i often have WAY more connections than you mention without experiencing the issues descibed, it becomes difficult for me to relate.

I must therefore maintain that the issue that you describe is related to something else than the networking code.

The latest ad is missing the older info, and i will restore the original image with extra large font regarding where to post issues.

Best regards.

Hello!

It's one of the easiest tools to get started with, which is why no tutorial has been required so far. Only a few people have requested a basic guide. Therefore, a documentation file is under development.

That said, as stated in the first post in the thread, it is still assumed that users have prior technical experience in using remote administration software, as it makes deployment easier. As with many things, trial and error is a common approach.

Best regards.

Hello!

If you read the first post in this thread, you will see that no spamming service is offered.

The other questions are quite "broad" and related to matters that are beyond my abilities to answer. For legal reasons i am only able to answer questions that are -directly- related to the software offered in this thread. I am sure that you understand this position.

"Truth be told" ?

Let's be honest.

If you're a user of this tool, it's hardly my fault if you choose to use a crypter and fail to crypt the binaries.

How about posting a complaint in the thread belonging to the crypter developer? After all, it is your crypter that is failing.

I thought it was appropriate to give you a negative rep simply because you show such total disregard for my hard work by blaming me and the project for problems directly related to yourself and your non-working crypter. Moreover, based on your messages, i must say that i have rarely come across someone being so patronizing and dismissive while requesting help with various technical questions.

If required, DarkVision RAT is easily and effectively crypted with a properly implemented runtime stub.

There you have it — the truth.

Please refrain from posting more falsehoods in this thread. I am not interested in any back and forth in this matter.

Announcement!

Later today, DarkVision RAT v1.24 will be released.

After nearly two months of nocturnal hacking, the 32-bit bot now offers enhanced injection capabilities on Wow64/64-bit systems. ?

The option to build pure 64-bit bots, of course, still exists. ?

Best regards.

Been using DarkVision Rat a lot recently. The most solid and flexible rat I have ever used.

x03x - August 4, 2024, 6:55 pm

The perfect Tool! I've been using it for a week, and everything works perfectly. No bugs or errors so far. I am TOTALLY HAPPY WITH IT!!!

My request for the developer is the following:

- 1- Add reverse SOCKS5 since Proxychains doesn't support SOCKS4a with extension (it works well with Proxifier since it supports SOCKS4a).
- 2- Allow us to save the current configuration while building the stub.
- 3- It would be nice if you change the color of the selected target to something different and solid.
- 4- Auto-refresh the directory once you upload a file to the target.
- 5- Automatically rename the file if it already exists after downloading it. For example, if a file named file.exe already exists, download the new file as file(copy1).exe.

Most of the points mentioned above are not urgent, but they will make the tool more friendly. One last thing: somehow, I'm not able to load the plugin for recovering passwords on the target. Maybe I'm missing something.

@DarkVision, please kindly let me know if this post is not for making requests. I will edit my comment and send the request to you by email.

Thanks, mate, for the great tool.

My crypter crypts Darkvision suffiently. It's a private solution from another forum. I don't think it is allowed to name drop external sources here. DV is a great tool and stable imho.

Avoid shared stubs.

There is no such thing as a permanently undetected program.

I use a (private) runtime stub for DarkVisionRAT with very good results, and I recommend going private immediately without wasting time and money on shared stubs. (Imagine 100 people using the same crypter stub; the detection rate quickly reaches pandemic levels with such crypters).

Hello!

Please refrain from posting false messages in this thread.

I haven't received any messages from you, so your claim that I am not responding is incorrect.

Regarding "crypter settings" for a specific crypter, you'll need to consult the crypter developer directly, as I am unable to answer questions about software developed by others. As mentioned elsewhere in this thread, I am legally prohibited from endorsing third-party software.

If you review previous posts, you will find crypter related replies from users of the tool.

I always respond to questions that are relevant to the software itself.

Best regards.

Since you've addressed me with harsh, bullshit claims that are clearly intended to maliciously trash my work, let me respond accordingly.

First, why don't you work on improving your skillset? And while you're at it, grow up and fix your attitude.

I've already explained that I am LEGALLY PROHIBITED from endorsing third-party software. Most people get that; you're one of the few who don't.

Here is a basic principle regarding crypting, whether you're a security professional or an activist for a good cause:

Anyone skilled enough to engage in activities requiring crypting should also have the technical ability to crypt their binaries without needing a nanny to do it for them.

I can crypt my binaries, and so can everyone else I know involved in such projects. Much bigger players than you are deploying DarkVision RAT with GREAT results, so don't get high and mighty with me by suggesting that i adapt my software to poorly implemented crypters.

So once again, stop posting false claims in this thread. Take your crypter issues to the crypter developer, who is responsible for their own software.

(If you actually read through the previous posts, you'll also see more competent users of the tool mentioning successful crypting).

IT'S NOT ROCKET SCIENCE. GET THAT THROUGH YOUR HEAD !!!!

As for me, I use a private crypter stub with DarkVision that works really well. However, if you expect anyone in their right mind to happily share their provider of good private crypts and increase the risk of getting a shared copy due to an increased customer base for the crypter seller, then you are really naive or maybe even stupid, if you excuse my French.

I am not contracted, but I am a frequent (and happy) user of DarkVision RAT. I use a private runtime native stub for all my payloads, not only for RAT's. You don't exactly come across as a genius if you think every user of the RAT will come running like a puppy on your command to agree with you just because you fail finding a decent crypter on HF. It's not allowed to name competing forums, so I won't do that (and even if it were, no one would spoonfeed it to you anyway for the same reason explained by the member you quoted). You're the kind of skid who uploads everything to VT and ruins it for everyone.

(How about playing with LEGO instead, but try not to swallow the pieces :)

If you know so much about the project to make insinuatory, disparaging, and meaningless posts like that in my sales thread, then you must also be well aware that my position on this matter has been stated numerous times in this thread.

I can crypt my binaries, and so can everyone else involved in activities where crypting is required. Either take the time to read my replies throughout the thread or refer to the more recent posts where capable users have addressed their crypting solutions.

That should resolve your concerns.

Creative ideas and suggestions are always welcome.

In addition to the existing remote microphone capture, a user has suggested adding a remote "speaker recording" feature to capture music (for example) played on the remote system. Incorporating this functionality into DV would be interesting, and fortunately, C++/WinAPI code from an earlier project is almost ready to be integrated into this tool.

The GUI is self-explanatory.

By reading the basic instructions and looking at the GUI, it becomes clear that installation is NOT required.

(And by scrolling back a few posts in this thread, you will find the answer to your other question).

protons9001 - September 16, 2024, 4:02 am

The only thing you can disable is the installation message. It is forcing you to input a installation root folder, subfolder, and executable filename.

Stop posting false claims in this thread.

Installation is NOT required, and nobody is being "forced" to do anything.

The folders you're referring to are only used for internal "maintenance" when melting/wiping is enabled.

Now stop spamming the thread with false claims, and read the instructions, like everyone else.

Genuine question. Why is your other RAT 80$ and this one is 60$? Just curious before I consider purchasing.

DarkVision - October 2, 2024, 4:26 pm

To clarify, this thread is dedicated to the DarkVision RAT project. Any questions unrelated to this project will not receive a response here.

Someone inquired about the price, and my answer is this.

DarkVision RAT has been sold for peanuts long enough, and upcoming feature additions and additional core mode will necessitate a two-step price increase for lifetime access, expected in mid to late October. (Or around that time).

EXISTING and NEW lifetime users will, of course, receive updates as per their agreement.

Further details will be announced in a later post.

I am also available through PM.

Who am I to ignore user requests (within reason)? ?

Dude, I couldn't stop myself from commenting (being a user of the rat).

The stubs work great for me, so you MUST be doing something wrong. Seriously your request for a TUTORIAL pretty much reveals what the real problem is - YOU.

No offense (but you come across as a Negative Nellie for no reason).

You said "dude if something is not working i should complain here."

I doubt that. The advertisement first in the thread says that tech support questions are NOT to be posted in the sales thread. I have lifetime (both rats) and my registration messages outlines that tech support is to be sent to a special email address.

Both RATs work great. (as mentioned, your request for a tutorial is telling of the problem).

DarkVision - October 9, 2024, 10:39 pm

DarkVision RAT v1.32 with an additional "Static" build-mode is about to be released.

While a dedicated crypter focuses on internal workings such as hooking and managing load configuration, less well-developed ones tend to perform only basic mapping and some external actions that often interfere with the payload's functionality.

The additional build mode generates a "static" executable that completely ignores any context, allowing it to be mapped seamlessly into the process, even by the inefficient RunPE-based crypters. This also disables some core features, which are instead delegated to the third-party mapper (e.g. crypter).

MAKE NO MISTAKE: This mode is not really necessary, as my own crypter works very well, as do others, and they require NO special mode.

However, this option will at least help mitigate common problems for those who for some reason insist on deploying the most poorly implemented RunPE-style mapping tools (e.g. crypters).

The link will be made available shortly.

Hope you will like this option. (I will repeat this post if necessary).

(Oct 20, 2024 10:00 PM)Caboose Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) With the recent news article that came out mentioning your software, will you still continue updating it and maintaining it?

Hello!

I can't say that I understand your concern.

The text you refer to is as dishonest as its authors, constantly using/repeating terms like "criminals" and "victims" while insinuating that the developers of the software are directly responsible for the events described — not to mention some of the technical peculiarities that jumps out.

As the advertisement states, this software is, has been, and will continue to be, marketed for three fully legitimate areas of deployment:

1. Remote Control.
2. Surveillance.
3. Various Security Projects.

Regarding your question alluding to the "future" of the tool:

I see no reason why the software would be revoked based on such articles. One could ask the same question to the developers of TeamViewer when their tool is used in ways that make headlines. They have no reason to revoke their product, and neither do I. This project also adheres fully to the laws in our country and the country hosting the project.

Therefore, I see no reason to go back and forth on this matter, at least not in this thread.

Lots of effort has been put into the project, and the tool will evolve with more features. ?

I hope this provides a satisfactory answer to your question.

(Apologies if I come across as a bit harsh, but I'm very tired and need to sleep. I'll review and correct any spelling or grammar errors later).

Best regards. ?

Hello!

One can use either IP or dynamic name.

You can also send questions via PM or one of the email addresses found in the first post.

Best regards.

DarkVision - October 21, 2024, 5:15 pm

Some have asked if the executable drops to disk.

The answer is NO (unless certain options are enabled).

As mentioned earlier, a recent release also offers an additional "STATIC" option/build-mode that generates an executable that doesn't interact with the file system at all by itself, allowing it to be mapped and executed seamlessly inside any bitwise compatible process space.

Even the simplest (cheese-based) "RunPE" can now map the executable either inside itself or externally without problems.

(Hopefully, I won't have to repost this detail).

You can always search for "RAT Guide" on this subforum as many people have made magnificent guides on basic use of RAT.

But if you're curious to know what some functions do like "file melt" etc. then you can ask some AI and it will give you basic description or again use the search on this site as I'm sure you're not the only one that have the same question.

Then play with the settings around, build the server file and test it in VirtualMachine to see if it works and is up to your expectations.

Yes it's a very good rat. Use a private runtime stub with emphasis on PRIVATE. Not a public stub marketed as private.

(Dec 16, 2024 02:24 PM)github67 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Great question! "how many amount of bots it can handle without crashing?"

No, it's not a "great question". It's a question that makes no sense, which is partly why I didn't respond earlier.

The assumption that something will crash simply due to incoming connections is fundamentally flawed.

The ability of a P2P system, like a RAT, to handle traffic depends on its design, resources, and scaling, not just the number of connections. Also, if you're asking this kind of question, it's safe to say you probably won't be generating traffic anywhere near the level that would actually cause a crash in the first place, so it's a bit of a moot point. Maybe try understanding the technical details first before asking questions that don't reflect any real world scenario.

I never replied to the post you quoted because it belongs to a multi-account that is notorious for posting trash and nonsense in my thread.

Best regards.

github67 - December 17, 2024, 5:52 am

It might not make sense to you. However, for us, as clients (not all of us), it is an important question, especially for some people who don't target just one individual in spear phishing, but rather multiple people. For me, this question matters because I am looking for a tool that can handle around +- 100 people and simple rat is enough not a botnet. Therefore, I see a lot of value in this question when it comes to my situation. No need to answer this question if it does make not sense for you.

DarkVision - December 21, 2024, 5:50 am

I may repeat this announcement a few more times before the price increase.

The current price for DarkVision RAT lifetime access is $60.

Later this month, the price will increase in two steps.

(Note: A decision was made to add one additional option to the the encryption manager/utility before the release, for those who may wonder what happened to the release).

Hello!

I find your blatant disregard for the fact that this thread is not intended for tech support to be highly provocative.

IF you have a lifetime license for the tool, you should be aware of the designated email address for tech support inquiries.

To answer your question: The plugin module is loaded remotely by simply clicking a button.

(Note: The terms state that users are expected to have a basic technical knowledge).

Have a nice day.

Hello !

This thread is not your trash dump. I can crypt my binaries. You should get some skills.

Your claim that "darkvision has stayed for years" only proves that you don't have a lifetime version with an update feature. And, evidently, your choice to dump your B.S. in this thread instead of forwarding a message via email like a normal person clearly shows your intention to trash the project.

Your posing and flexing impress no one.

Now go vomit somewhere else.

Edit: I edited out some profanity.

"Come in peace" ???

Anybody who reads your original post can clearly see your disregard for basic mutual respect, both towards me and the basic posting principles — so why should I sugarcoat my reply, out of respect to you?

Firstly, I don't need your "accolades".

Most people send messages via PM or email. They don't post malicious B.S. claims with the intent of defaming a project they claim to be using.

Once again: This thread is NOT a dumping ground for arrogant B.S. and nonsense. How hard is that to understand?

And I couldn't care less about the third-party creations you refer to in an attempt to flaunt your skills. Go flex your inflated ego somewhere else. I'm sure there are plenty of your kind who will be impressed by your self-proclaimed merits and experience. Also, I'm not on your payroll, so I won't be entertaining your advice to sell the project, etc.

Don't follow up with more B.S. tirades. I have more important things to do, like working.

(Jan 25, 2025 10:26 AM)dark_hydra Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) is there a rootkit kernel that can kill antivirus processes and hide processes, registry, files... ?

That's a pretty naive question. A rootkit like that would need an EV cert to load, which isn't cheap, and I highly doubt the owner of DarkVision would waste money on code signing that'll just get revoked in a few days. (And black market EVs aren't exactly free either.)

Instead, crypt the RAT with a unique PRIVATE stub.

no im not agree , you can use vulnerable signed for load the rootkit , It's you who are wrong after that you have to bypass patch guard but that's another story.it's not enough a crypter with edr and I already have a process hollowing so good but I don't know how to code a kernel rootkit so that's why I'm asking the question

I can vouch that ZLOY is a very competent malware (and crypter) developer. You can't, on one hand, say "bypass Patch Guard" like it's something easily done, and then brush it off with "that's another story". You don't bypass Patch Guard just like that. In this case, I am 100% in agreement with ZLOY's conclusion. Your first post was a bit silly to be honest.

EINSTEEN - January 27, 2025, 3:23 am i would suggest using one of the many free ones like qausar or xeno, before moving on to the more advanced ones.

you can use virtual machines connected over their own private network to infect, destroy and rebuild to get the hang of RAT's.

you need to disbale windows defender or any AV that are on them to allow infection.

I noticed that the forum rules have been adjusted regarding contracts.

If you wish to start a contract, please allow me a couple of days to update the image with the new terms (for new contracts). After that, I will be ready to accept your contract, provided the terms are reasonable.

Thank you for your patience.

DarkVision - March 20, 2025, 2:32 pm

Again, if you start a contract, you must include a confirmation in the terms section of the contract form, where you agree to the mutual terms.

Some are starting contracts without including this, which indicates a misconception (or indifference on the customer's part?) that the contract is a one-way obligation from the seller to the customer, which is not the case. The contract, for the tool in question, is a mutual agreement that stipulates the seller is obligated to allow access to updates when available, while the customer is expected to adhere to the terms outlined at the end of the advertisement.

Thank you for understanding.

I am afraid that since Windows XP has long been obsolete, there is no motivation to support it. As for the other builds, I can't see the relevance in the context of the tool.

But I wish that the old breadbaskets, like the C64, Spectrum, Amiga, and Atari, would become popular again.

Sadly, the six or seven most recent contracts that were initiated completely overlook (or ignore) the mutual terms.

If you wish to start a contract, please review the terms at the end of the advertisement in the first post of the thread. In the contract's terms section, include a confirmation that you have read and accept the mutual terms. Be sure to specify the correct amount in USD and include your contact information. Do not include questions in the terms section of the contract, as I am unsure how to interpret such terms.

Hey, real noobie here.

I want to start tempering with RATs and started doing some research.

So if anyone can answer my questions I'd appreciate:

1. Is DarkVision RAT a good all around software comparable to the other out there?
2. Why not use any free open source ones like Quasar?
3. Is it easy to use (creating payload, managing afterwards)?
4. Can I simply attack a windows computer by installing the payload 'on a different network's with no access to firewall / router stuff?
5. Does the RAT get picked up by anti virus by default?

To answer your question.

1. it is better then some of the rats around and they dev has kept it up to date so far. if you are a newbie i would start with some of the free ones like quasar.
2. free ones get detected much more easily then a paid for RAT, updates are usually not regular if at all.
3. it is quite easy once you know what you are doing, the rats has "plugins" that are only loaded when you want them, not like some where they are hard coded into the payload file which makes it more easy to detect. with a plugin system if a plugin is detected then you just re-code that plugin and not have to do much else with the main program.
4. you would have to crypte the payload file and make it lucrative for someone to install it, or load it on an exploit which for free are few and far between. you could try social engineering your target. the rat should work with out opening any ports on the victim PC.
5. by default after any rat has been out in the wild it will get detect by any AV. this the reason you will need a crypter to make sure it is hidden as best as it can be, AV these days are pretty on point at picking stuff up.

I can shut off the AV during installation, and do whatever I want while installing it....

My question is if I need access the the router there or mess with ports... Or the RAT will work right away without me having to do anything.

2. Does this RAT have remote desktop (like Quasar)

The RAT will work with out fiddling with the ports on the target machines router. you will have to add exceptions to the AV for it to run probulary and for it not to be dectected.

Darkvision has remote desktop, also has remote filemanager etc

DarkVision RAT v1.37 will FINALLY be released on Monday.

+ Encryption Manager.

+ A basic (but extensible) system info module.

+ A rewritten socket pool manager.

Following the v1.37 release, a new feature will allow embedding EXTENSIONS into the bot during the build process. The first extension will include a file extraction/FTP feature. Also fulfilling a request from some customers to enable the builder and other dialogs to remember previous settings

Also, please remember that if you start a contract, you must include a confirmation of your agreement to the mutual terms.

Thank you!

I may be wrong, but if your comment was ignored it could be due the nature of your post which clashes with the terms (mentioned in the reply you quote).

Or perhaps he just missed it.

A very good tool i have been using for a while now.

I just have one suggestion please can you allow server creation without process injection for 32 bit server?

I build my stub with 32 bit but because of that i struggle to crypt it. my best crypter only works for 32 bit but for that i need to off that inject into process for 32 bit server please i will be happy if is something you can look into.

Thanks for the product and kind regards to you.

HeeKuyTad - May 1, 2025, 4:25 pm

Hello. Does it require another program to make a crypter or encrypt to make a FUD Payload, or can DarkVision make a FUD Payload by itself?

It still work if target use malwarebyte or other anti malware ?

I'm about to buy it.

I played around with Quasar and could not get it to work while not building and deploying in same network.

I tried Portmap.io, noip.com with no luck.

So I need to know; with DarkVision, can I just create the payload build and install it on a different computer which is on a different network and instantly connect with no issues?

My server will be a laptop, which I constantly connect to different networks, so no static IP. Will it still work? How can I easily make it work?

Thanks

DarkVision is (already) an excellent tool that also keeps getting better, but without technical knowledge, you will still fall flat on your nose. At least some basic understanding of networking is required. A consistent crypter is recommended for best results. ??

There is no issue with the remote browser, so your bug report is not valid. Additionally, posting bug reports, regardless of their validity, in this thread instead of using the designated contact address, violates the terms.

you could use a DNS service so that it will update with the new IP's, problem is some DNS services can take 24hrs to update.

you could also use a VPS to tunnel it thru via VPN, you would need a "bullet proof" server for that as most of the big providers, collect logs and will end up banning you from the service.

Hello,

I'm an Happy owner of your tool. I've encountered an issue with the password recovery plugin in your RAT.

When I use the `PASSWORDRECOVERYPLUGIN64.dll`, the recovered passwords from Chrome appear corrupted or unreadable. Instead of showing the actual password text, I get strange Unicode characters or garbled output (e.g., "bû " or "ïÜw×»æ...").

Interestingly, the recovered passwords from Edge display correctly in plain text, so it seems the issue is specific to Chrome and possibly related to Unicode conversion or character encoding within the plugin.

Could you please take a look at this? Perhaps there's a way to patch the plugin or add an option to handle encoding properly when dumping passwords from Chrome.

Let me know if you need any logs or sample outputs.

Thanks for your great work and support!

You wont get help with all the ShOuTiNg, ever thought the dev has a life as well as doing his projects that yes we have/are paying for but they started out of love for coding and decided to realease their hard work to use lot to use.

Unless you code or have code and application or anything, you have no idea how hard it is to kill a bug or figure out why it wont do what you want.

and before you start spouting off, i do code and have done apps for myself personally, i have coded a web scraper for use in spreading RATS etc that can select differnet sites and check if they are live before it loads, it also renames the file to the scraped information, and this was before all the AI tools we have.

peter_dudu - May 8, 2025, 8:43 pm

Hello. pls send me msg. HAVE SOME QUESTIONS ABOUT THIS TOOL

DarkVision - May 8, 2025, 9:51 pm

Recently, in this thread, someone publicly made false claims about things I haven't done, accusing me of selling a non-functional tool and mocking him through email. These accusations are completely untrue.

Since the person has chosen to lie about me publicly in the sales thread, I will, of course, post a short public response.

I HAVE NEVER EXCHANGED ANY EMAILS WITH THIS PERSON — EVER.

To understand the origin of this situation, I sent out a few inquiries yesterday and received a few email messages that had been exchanged between this individual and a partner on the project.

The first message, written entirely in capital letters, much like the forum post, was an urgent request for help with the connection process. The partner responded with a sufficient technical explanation for this basic procedure.

The next email included references to "victims" and mentioned issues and dissatisfaction with a malfunctioning third-party crypter (which has no connection to the project), and cited things a crypter developer had supposedly said.

In response, the partner clarified that we are bound by a legal agreement with a law firm that prohibits us from participating in third-party projects, including any activities involving victimizing people or assisting in the crypting on behalf of others.

The person didn't like this reply and went on to claim that the tool "doesn't work" — effectively accusing us of running a scam.

After that, the partner chose to stop responding, as the situation had clearly escalated beyond the point of productive communication.

Now, the person is here on the forum repeating malicious, trashy posts with false claims of bugs that aren't actually bugs, along with accusations of mocking (that never happened), all in total disregard of the mutual agreement.

The terms clearly and reasonably state that customers must have at least a basic level of technical knowledge, and if any third-party service outside this project fails to do its job, then do the homework and consult the documentation or support for that particular service.

Most importantly, in this entire meaningless drama, I don't mock anyone!

Thank you.

Process injection means that the bot is injected into another process. Melting is an old school concept for removing the bot from disk after injection.

DV also has a "Wipe" option to wipe the injecting executable from disk after injection.

DarkVision RAT isn't a stealer - it's a RAT.

It does have PW recovery. I can say for sure it's a really good/stable tool, but having some networking skills is required to use it right.

(Being totally clueless about networking won't get you anywhere). ?

I purchased my tool a few days ago by requesting the payment info from the "tooldev" address and received the download credentials very quickly. And yesterday, I received a quick reply to a question I sent just a couple of hours earlier.

Let me get this straight.

You're warning people not to buy the tool because the developer didn't slap some "I swear I'm the real coder" confirmation onto a message or website, at your request?

Either you're troll or confused and delusional HF user.

If you can't afford to risk 60$ for a REALLY WELL VOUCHED PRODUCT then HF is not for you nor any other forums as HF is ultra newbie friendly.

I can vouch for myself that the transaction went smoothly and that I've been using the product happily for over 6 months. It's not the prettiest RAT but it's for sure quite decently solid and insane value especially for dirt cheap one time fee.

That said, lately this thread has attracted a few...let's just say, folks who aren't exactly the brightest bulbs in the box. Dumb claims and questions that should be asked elsewhere and not in this thread.

DarkVision just don't let these people get under your skin as they are not worth your time. Also love the newest update, looking forward to the next one! ?

A reminder.

Three contracts have been initiated since yesterday, but none contain confirmation of agreement to the mutual terms. Please note that I can only accept contracts that clearly confirm agreement to the

I'm not forcing anyone to use a contract, but if you choose to become a contracted customer, you must explicitly agree to the mutual terms before the contract can be accepted.

To clarify: If you initiate a contract, include in the "terms" field that you agree to the mutual terms located at the end of the first post.

Example Terms: "Lifetime access to updates. I have read and agree to the mutual terms"

Without this detail, I will not be able to accept the contract.

A new feature supporting custom extensions is under development.

This feature will unlock a whole new range of possibilities by allowing user-developed modules with custom options (all compressed and encrypted) to be embedded directly into the server or bot through build-time configuration.

Custom extensions will run instantly and seamlessly within the bot process, either as memory-mapped components without requiring disk or network interaction or, depending on user options, dropped and system-loaded via LoadLibrary as regular DLLs.

This isn't revolutionary on its own, but when combined with the existing 100% plugin architecture, the flexibility of DarkVision RAT will be unparalleled. Keep in mind that custom extensions are not plugins requiring a network connection; instead, they are mapped and invoked immediately when the bot runs.

DarkVision RAT v1.40 is out of the bag. ?

+ Extension Manager with support for 64-bit custom (user coded) features.

(Check the included skeleton source for the "Demo Extension". It only shows a message to indicate its presence. You can do whatever you want, but DO NOT IGNORE the guidelines for the required exports).

Shortly, more "in-house" features will be included as extensions, including the file extractor mentioned earlier, and much more.

You can't be more flexible than this.

DarkVision RAT v1.41 will be released in a couple of days.

- + Updated the process token in the remote browser module to handle elevation.
- + Added an extra callback to the extension manager to notify extensions about bot updates and wipes.
- + Persistence for static mode builds will likely be enabled.

With more to come...

Hello!

Instead of shaming or blaming me publicly for something I haven't done, you should recognize that, as stated at the end of the first post, you are responsible for saving the archive in a safe place, which allows you to obtain updates through the designated button in the program.

If you want a new link, you must request it from the source (domain) of the original one.

Don't even try to imply that I've done anything wrong in this matter.

Have a good day.

I'm not blaming you, just that I've sent several emails and received no response. Also, on HF in Convo, they see that you've logged in. It's quite frustrating. You say, "If you want a new link, you must request it from the source (domain) of the original."

Or exactly, because I received the link by email and asked for it in that email.

Thank you and sorry for this post.

How can you not understand? ?. It's actually super easy if you look at the GUI and the instructions carefully without just glossing over them. Sure, you need basic knowledge like understanding IP addresses and that stuff, but overall an intuitive (and really awesome) tool. You can't be ratting without the basic skills, just like you can't eat soup if you don't understand how to use a spoon. (Unless you're one of those who slurp from the bowl). ???

If you're new to the RAT and don't understand the terminology well you're in luck as today you have this awesome tool called AI Chatbot that you can ask things about it so it can tell you what each function does.

There are also PLENTY of RAT tutorials threads on this subforum that you can read up to learn the basics.

Buddy in all "fairness", those terms at the end of the page are actually quite clear that users need or should have at least some basic skills with this kind of tool. I think DV is very easy to use. Especially the static mode makes it even easier.

Thank you for being so openly transparent in expressing your intentions in this thread.

Let me clarify that anyone who violates the terms by using this software to victimize others, sharing the activation key, posting false accusations, etc, will face consequences depending on the violation. The terms are located at the end of the advertisement in the first post of the thread for anyone to read.

I am not angry; I am just disappointed by how some people can show such a lack of respect for the very reasonable terms in my thread.

Side note: I just logged in and found two new contracts started for DarkVision RAT. However, since both disregarded the terms, I have no other option but to disregard those contracts as a consequence.

Sadly.

Hello!

I have been away for almost a week for health reasons.

I hope to be back on track tomorrow.

A reminder: Payments can only be made through the following options:

1. The address provided through the contract procedure. (Contract MUST include your agreement to the terms).

2. Some insist on paying directly to a requested address obtained from the codev, via contact information specified in the advertisement.

Any of the options mentioned ensures delivery within 24 hours.

Any payments or communication with THIRD PARTIES are outside my control.

Again, I hope to be back on track tomorrow.

Thank you for your understanding.

glad u feeling better bro. any planned big updates coming? :D

I have been away for a few days again for acceptable reasons.

I have never rejected any contract from you. I logged in today; had you given me a couple of hours, I may have accepted the contract after review.

But it's fortunate that you revealed your accusatory personality before I accepted the contract, as it allows me to block you from my account with a clear conscience. I don't want anything to do with people who accuse me of things I haven't done.

I'm not sure if you've noticed, but I've been waiting for quite a long time. I find the program you developed quite interesting, so I check every day to see if the contract has been approved. I didn't notice before that the contract needs to be confirmed to start. Then I saw your request to agree to the contract, and today I found that my agreement to the contract was rejected, so I just asked about it. If you think this is an accusation, then I have nothing more to say.

There are no links to be handed out.

Since you seem to be out to publicly question the lifetime license, let me clarify.

When customers purchase the software, they are (according to the terms they read and accepted) required to make one or more backups of the archive, should the original archive be misplaced or lost. All that is needed to obtain updates is to restore the backup, extract it, and click a button in the client application.

The update solution once relied solely on the button. However, a while back when the licensing solution was modified, an additional internal and seamless updating capability was incorporated by the codev to further ensure availability for customers.

Therefore, your questioning of the software's lifetime license is completely unfounded, as it is now even stronger than before due to this enhanced internal measure "on top" of the button. All that is required is that the customer takes the time, or bothers, with backing up the archive.

I haven't taken anything away from you. Whether you're a real user or a troll, in the end, YOU are the one who didn't bother making any backups.

Your post indicates an indifference toward the mutual terms you supposedly agreed to, while unfairly and publicly placing the blame on me through insinuations regarding my credibility or integrity concerning the lifetime license.

To answer your final question: "Do you think this is a lifetime license?" - The answer is yes!

I recommend that you read the terms again to get a better understanding.

Attitude? Threats?

If you were a customer, and not a multi account trash poster, you should consider your own attitude towards the MUTUAL AGREEMENT you supposedly entered, which states that customers are responsible for backing up the archive.

Backing up an archive, according to the mutual terms, is not an unreasonable request, and there are valid technical reasons for links not being handed out like bubblegum, and the automatic update solution was implemented to facilitate updates without manual link handling.

I won't be going back and forth because it's clear that your intentions are to damage my reputation by slandering my profile.

Again, I haven't taken anything from you or anyone else.

Refrain from further groundless negative posting here about "threats" that never happened.

DarkVision - October 24, 2025, 8:39 pm

A clarification is needed due to the recent wave of meaningless multi-account drama.

Scenario one:

Someone pays scammers, crackers, or other slime and then demands the product from me. When I refuse to provide it or reimburse them, I'm suddenly the bad guy who deserves to get "exposed" on the forum.

Scenario two:

Someone buys the software and then "loses" the very archive that they AGREED TO BACK UP in case of that exact situation. When I don't, despite technical obstacles, hand out another link, I'm again labeled the bad guy and threatened with unjustified negative "exposure".

If anybody thinks I'm the bad guy here, you lack basic common sense.

Thank you for reading.

For those who may be wondering, the next update is currently undergoing final testing.

I would like to file a complaint regarding the seller's unprofessional conduct and misleading information provided to customers.

The seller advertises a “lifetime license”, but this statement is not accurate. In case a customer loses their files or they become encrypted, the seller refuses to provide any form of assistance — even when the customer can prove ownership by providing the original license key and contacting them from the registered email address.

Furthermore, instead of resolving the issue, the seller unjustly decreases the customer’s reputation score.

Such actions demonstrate a clear lack of responsibility and respect toward clients. I strongly recommend that potential buyers exercise caution when dealing with this seller.

I am submitting this complaint so that other users are aware of these issues, and I kindly ask the platform administration to review this seller’s practices.

I agree with the developer.

They can't give you a new link because the RAT is constantly being updated, and your version might be outdated. That's why you might be using an older version that the developer no longer has.

If they give you a new version just because you lost yours, then everyone could claim, "I lost my files," to get the latest version. (I haven't read the agreement)

Announcement!

Before releasing the feature that was originally scheduled next, a decision was made to release a requested "Connection Monitor" similar to TCP View.

It looks pretty nice and can (and will) be expanded with more connection and process-related functionality.

It will be made available after further testing.

Thank you for reading. Please be sure to review the terms before contacting.

Hang in there!

My apologies for not yet releasing the promised "Connection Monitor" (a feature similar to "TCP View").

I just HAD to include one more option before release. It's now working, and just a bit more testing is required.

I appreciate your patience.

The feature will be made available in just a few days. ?

Reminder!

When starting a contract, please don't forget to include your approval of the mutual terms. Add something like "I have read and agree to the mutual terms", then I can accept your contract.

Additionally, if you try to contact via email, please refer to the TUTAMAIL option specified in the advertisement.

Thank you for your understanding.

(The next version with the promised remote "TCP View/Connection Monitor" is ready to be released very shortly. Don't worry.) ?

DarkVision - December 3, 2025, 3:27 am

Another Reminder!

Some people are starting contracts specifying unsupported payment methods, making it impossible to accept the contract.

If you start a contract:

1. Only specify one of the supported payment methods: BTC, XMR, ETH, LTC, USDT (TRC20/ERC20).

2. Include something like "I have read and agree to the mutual terms" in the terms section of the contract.

I will then be able to accept the contract.

Again, thank you for your understanding.

All incoming COHERENT email messages that are RELEVANT TO THE PROJECT and DO NOT CLASH WITH THE TERMS will be replied to and handled professionally by the codev and me accordingly.

Any message that is UNRELATED TO THE PROJECT or VIOLATES THE TERMS will be ignored.

Your remark about "...you can't just be building and not responding to people" is simply unfounded conjecture (bullshit).

Announcement!

The latest version with "Remote Connection Monitor" was made available a while back.

If your client is recent, you should be able to click the update button to fetch it.

If your client is a bit older, you might see a different message. The solution is to send your activation key to the codev at tooldev@tutamail.com and request the temporary URL; then you will be able to fetch the latest update.

What else?

If you plan to start a contract, then don't forget to specify the right amount ($60) and include something like this in the terms field:

"I have read and agree with the mutual terms"

Thank you for your understanding

There's a remote browser module with it's own desktop.

Based on earlier contact, I recall the owner has the same "stand" on HVNC as the owner of the old

Haha wtf did I just read? You don't exactly come across as an angel yourself, posting negative judgments about someone without even being a customer, according to what you just said.

My experience is the EXACT opposite.

I have NOTHING negative to say about the support I've received after my purchase. After all, he said in a post that all messages that are coherent and don't violate the terms are replied to, which is pretty reasonable. In fact, I have been sending lots of suggestions for features, and they have ALL been met with a professional tone.

My two cents.

DarkVision is NOT a scammer.

No "offence" but you must have very limited networking skills if you fail with this tool.

The tool works great for many people, including myself. If it simply doesn't work for you, then it's obvious that something is missing in your skill set.

You ignored my help. When you contacted me in the PM and asked for AnyDesk help, I provided a good advice. If you had followed it, your problem would have been resolved.

The fact remains: DarkVision RAT works great and is easy to use, and you can't expect any stupid claim to go unanswered.

there is browser password recovery, offline keylogger so i assume it get cookie too. if it dont you can manually download them, create a plugin to get them or ask someone to code one, or remote the user and do your things from his computer! In reality, RAT might get deleted before user connects to the wallet.

well it should not because you have to get it crypted! This rat have a stealer but for browser data saved or with live/offline keylogger! If you see the user logged in EXODUS for exemple, you can start rmeote browser and clone the current session (so you have the SAME tabs as he have and you are logged in where he is) So you will be logged in!! You can also activate keylogger to get credidential but the rat seem to steal those. You must do this before he close his pc right.

Also, is it possible to copy the browser if user is offline, from the last available session?

If you were scammed, I am sorry to hear that. However, the fair thing to do would be to direct your complaint to the scammers and not dump unjustified insinuations in this thread.

Please refrain from making further insinuatory and defamatory remarks of that kind in this thread, or I will report it to the staff as a clear attempt at character assassination of my person or, at the very least, my profile.

Important reminder!

If you start a contract, do not gloss over the terms.

Make sure you have reviewed all terms in the thread carefully several times.

Mainly:

It is very important to understand that the contract is not a one-way commitment from me to the customer, but a mutual agreement that both parties are expected to fulfill.

If the customer ignores the agreed-upon terms, I will reciprocate that conduct.

Also, as the terms state, the customer is required to have basic technical experience — no "nanny" or "spoon feeding" included for a lifetime license, to put it funnily.

Thank you for your understanding.

open a contract with darkvision, agree with the terms type "i agree with the terms" (make sure you do), wait and darkvision will come back to you. there should be a "start contract" on the first page of this thread.

it could be a few days for darkvision to come back to you as like everyone else they have a life outside of HF and they propulary get spammed quite a lot with contracts that are not done correctly.

You're right about the contracts.

Unfortunately, most people ignore (or overlook) the terms, which is why there are so many expired contracts. Some contracts also expired because I had to be offline. While the terms are definitely an extra step, without the agreement, we wouldn't be able to market the tool at all.

DarkVision - January 22, 2026, 11:26 pm

Hello!

Despite the clear instructions to include a confirmation of the terms when starting a contract, many members just seem to ignore it.

THIS ALSO LEADS TO AN INCREASED COUNT OF EXPIRED CONTRACTS IN MY PROFILE.

(If you started a contract that has expired, please restart it according to the terms).

Reminder:

1. In the terms field, include something like: "I have read and agree to the terms". (Without quotes).
2. You are REQUIRED to have prior technical experience.

With a lifetime license, you have all the time in the world to learn how to use the already easy-to-use software.

3. DO NOT GLOSS OVER THE TERMS!

In case you're wondering why I always emphasize the terms, it's because a legal agreement with a law firm mandates that all customers agree to the terms of use.

THE NEXT FEATURE IS IN ITS FINAL STAGES BEFORE RELEASE.

Thank you for reading.

Hello!

For those waiting for the next version with the file logging extension:

Just before the intended release, I added an option to restrict scanning to known folders only on the system drive; an option that is now in place.

All possible drives can be selected, but the search can now be narrowed down further. Additional known folders will be added later.

The builder (setup wizard) and the manager dialogs also have a much cleaner look now.

Just a bit more testing is required.

Where is the next update, you ask?

I am glad to announce that the next release of DarkVision Remote Administration Tool will, in addition to the "HTTP/S File Logging Extension," also feature a cleaner, brighter look in the manager dialogs, including alternating item colors in the listview controls. More features related to security testing are planned for upcoming releases.

(I mentioned this before, but not the layout of the listviews).

Please allow one, two, or three more days for this "miracle" to happen.

I am tired and have to rest for a while.

DarkVision RAT v1.47 is available.

New for this version:

- + HTTP/S-Based File Logger for moderately sized files.
- + Brighter manager dialogs for improved readability.
- + Updated password recovery for Chrome in both plugin and extension.
- + Internal fixes not noticeable by the user.

IMPORTANT:

If you start a contract, ensure that the terms are compatible with those stated in the thread.

CONFIRM your agreement and acceptance of the terms outlined in the thread by including a statement like this:

"I have read and accept the mutual terms" (Without quotation marks).

Thank you for clarifying this. It should also be clear from the first post in the thread.

The tool has an extra check for updates through an onion service running on shared hosting, which means it could sometimes be offline due to bandwidth limitations. But it is online frequently enough to offer additional update functionality for users.

Hello. I'm a buyer of this tool, and I've been politely requesting your support via email (why don't you offer another way to contact me for faster and more efficient support?). Each inquiry takes more than a day to get a response. Some of the tool's features aren't working for me (I already emailed you two days ago without a reply) Ok no problem but 2 days? bad. Two days without a response to my problem, yet here in the sales thread on the forum, you responded seven hours ago. It seems you're bothered by people posting about support issues here, but you don't respond promptly via email either. We as users have to comply with the terms, but you as the seller have to provide support. The last response I received from support was on March 29th. So what's the problem? Addressing some of the inaccuracies (confusions) in your post.

REGARDING THE "NO SUPPORT" COMPLAINT:

NO IN-DEPTH SUPPORT OR INVOLVEMENT IS INCLUDED IN THE AGREEMENT, BECAUSE:

All users, per the agreement, are required to possess prior technical knowledge and experience.

Additionally, this software is already offered WELL BELOW market price, with LIFETIME access to updates, which makes it financially impossible to engage in users deployment cases or provide in-depth support. That equation doesn't work.

That being said, we always respond to general questions about the software itself and you HAVE received help from the codev with your issues (that aren't even bugs).

To address your request for communication methods other than email, I would say that email is sufficient for messaging. If a message can't be conveyed by email, it can't be that important.

REGARDING OUR OBLIGATION:

Our obligation DOES NOT involve in-depth support or involvement in users deployment of the software for the reasons explained initially.

Our obligation DOES constitute providing updates when available via the software's built-in update mechanism — that is the lifetime license per the contract.

REGARDING THE CLAIM OF "NON WORKING" FEATURES:

Finally, all functions operate as intended and have been tested extensively by myself, my codev, and a user base of pen-testers and other security professionals, all of whom have provided overwhelmingly positive feedback. This is an original product, and my confidence in the software is stronger than ever. I am conducting this project on Hack Forums and elsewhere with the intent of providing users a robust, evolving remote administration tool.

Perhaps you should review the terms again. I have fulfilled my obligations in compliance with the contract.

(I won't engage in any chatting in this thread. Further messages may be sent to the designated contact address).

Best regards.

cazadorville1 - March 31, 2026, 2:17 pm

Hello. To clarify:

- 1- When some features of a tool aren't working, the buyer has the right to ask the seller for an explanation of why it's not working.
- 2- Even though the price is low, you're still paying for a product.
- 3- You should have a post-sale support system. You can't just take the money and wash your hands of it when the buyer requests support with your product.

Here, no one is asking for support on how to operate your product; they're asking for support with its internal workings.

To clarify: I don't like to complain publicly (I first request support from the seller, but when I don't receive support, as in my case—two days without a response), there's no other option. I'm not saying your tool is a scam, I'm just asking for better communication through the provided contact method to resolve the issues with your product.

That's all I have to say, regards.

It's a great native tool in my opinion.

You're right: no one is going to share any crypter-related info here.

That said, I appreciate your positivity on the remote administration tool.

Announcement!

Before the next version with another extension/feature, we will release an intermediate version of the process manager that includes a user-requested "Inject/Load DLL" function/option. It is currently being tested and will be made available as soon as testing is finished.

I hope you will find it useful.

If you start a contract, please don't forget to:

1. Read the mutual terms located in the first post of the thread.
2. Specify the correct amount (currently $60).
3. Include "I have read and accept the mutual terms" (without quotation marks) in the Terms section of the contract form.

Thank you for reading.

DarkVision - April 7, 2026, 1:36 am

I CANNOT believe I have to make another reminder.

To prevent you from starting a contract I can't accept, first read the terms, then include the following exact sentence in the contract (without quotation marks):

1. "I have read and agree to the mutual terms."
2. Specify the correct amount, currently $60 (USD). (Will inevitably increase as new functionality is added).

Any contract omitting these details will be impossible for me to accept and will expire, which is unfortunate.

Thank you for understanding.

Next release/feature is undergoing extensive testing.

Live well.

trashiq - April 7, 2026, 5:34 am

How to contact you?

leetboi - April 8, 2026, 5:26 pm

there is no response to my contract

DarkVision - April 9, 2026, 2:36 am

THREE MORE CONTRACTS will expire without handling, just because the creator ignores the terms.

For the millionth time:

If you start a contract, then include the following exact sentence in the contract (without quotation marks):

1. "I have read and agree to the mutual terms."
2. Specify the correct amount, currently $60 (USD). (Will inevitably increase as new functionality is added.)

Any contract omitting these details will be impossible for me to accept for legal reasons and will expire, which is unfortunate.

BEGINNING 04/10/2026:

Considering all reminders posted by me here regarding the terms, including the instructions in the thread, I am starting to suspect some people are trying to deliberately increment my count of expired contracts (trolling, baiting, or something to that effect).

I DO NOT APPRECIATE THIS!

From now on, if you start a contract that omits the required agreement to the terms or the correct amount (i.e, ignoring the terms even before starting the contract), I will give a -5 popularity rating and block you from my profile for deliberately trying to damage my credibility by increasing the number of expired contracts.

Thank you for understanding.

Best regards.

DarkVision - April 10, 2026, 5:13 am

Sick of the recent random trash dumping, bullshit claims, and accusations here.

Yes, sleazy scammers are modding this tool and selling crippled copies.

If you pay a scammer, take your complaint to them - do not post baseless accusations in this thread.

Making false accusations against the wrong person reflects poorly on your character and actually says more about you.

For some positivity, I will follow up with a reminder about the next release later, for anyone who missed it.

Best regards.

DarkVision - April 10, 2026, 11:26 am

Adjusted announcement!

As stated prior, before the next version with another extension/feature, we will release an intermediate version of the process manager that includes a user-requested "Inject/Load DLL" function/option. It is currently being tested and will be made available as soon as testing is finished.

Following that, we will also include language options supporting Chinese, for example. (Fortunately, AI should be useful for quick translation).

We will also handle suggestions for specific apps in password recovery.

If you start a contract, please don't forget to:

1. Read the mutual terms located in the first post of the thread.
2. Specify the correct amount (currently $60, will increase with new features).
3. Include "I have read and accept the mutual terms" (without quotation marks) in the Terms section of the contract form.

REMEMBER: DO NOT START A CONTRACT WITHOUT THE REQUIRED INFO INCLUDED.

Thank you for reading.

Live well.

Regarding the drama trash-post before this one:

He is NOT a customer.

I have no intention of being polite to someone trying to drag me into victimizing others with something as lame as DDoS.

Before his first drama-thread was removed, someone posted a reply similar to this about his fucked-up mentality:

QUOTE FROM ANOTHER MEMBER ABOUT THE POST:

"YOU'RE FINE WITH VICTIMIZING OTHERS, BUT ACT LIKE A VICTIM WHEN YOU RECEIVE A HARSH RESPONSE."

It can also be TECHNICALLY CONFIRMED AND VERIFIED that 99% (ninety-nine percent) of my replies in private messages are polite in tone — and why wouldn't they?

Pretty much the only time I reply harshly is when someone accuses me of scamming (which is a crime accusation) — something I have never done.

HF members and others waiting for the next release: be aware this type of meaningless drama post takes focus from it.

I owe him nothing; he should go somewhere else and refrain from posting any more meaningless drama in this thread.

(At least while it's being paid for).

Remote browser works as should (for browsing pages inside a silent desktop).

No RAT is FUD or UD out of the box, but crypting DarkVision is easy enough with a good crypter.

("good crypter" meaning not a copy-paste 32-bit crypter from HF marketplace, hahaha).

I don't want to violate the license terms by name dropping crypters in this thread (I was told that specifically in a reply to one of my earlier posts.) But I now use my own C-based crypter for some builds depending on setup, and in other cases a third party one (not from HF). I always build dv binaries in static mode when crypting the bots.

Hello Sir,

I would like to suggest adding a Zip plugin to your software. At times, when downloading a folder or files that contain multiple subfolders, it becomes difficult to retrieve everything efficiently because the content is not compressed. Including a zip feature would make it much easier to download complete folders in a single file.

Thank you for considering this suggestion.

Reminder.

Sadly, if your contract omits the required agreement to the mutual terms, it will expire without handling.

All instructions are available in the sales thread, including a reminder written in BIG GREEN LETTERS close to the "Start Contract" button.

Also, some members keep repeating invalid contracts, either with the intent of trolling, or possibly expecting a one-sided deal where all obligations are on the seller.

That won't happen.

Thank you for understanding.

Slobodan - May 1, 2026, 5:15 am

Please check your mail.

I want to buy the RAT and have sent you a message at tooldev@tutamail.com requesting a USDT payment address.

(My email begins with "nic".)

Thanks.

Info.

Right before the next version was about to be released, an "activist-minded" contact suggested that we add an HTTP/S thumbnail logging extension to the tool. It sounded like an interesting idea which would also enhance the tool's versatility even more.

So, by waiting a bit longer, those inclined will be able to log thumbnails to HTTP/S with some extra control options available.

I will repost this again if required.

(If you start a contract, please don't forget to follow the guidelines located on the first page of the sales thread).

Thank you for reading.

Hello!

I am afraid I can't find any message from you in my inbox.

Since you made your contract post public in this thread, I assumed my reply would fit here to also remind others about the terms requirements; I have done this numerous times before.

I am unable to accept any contract with your account due to the willful and frankly disrespectful disregard of the mutual terms. This is nothing personal; I take the same position with any member who ignores the mutual terms.

Although the contract instructions are written in BIG GREEN LETTERS near the contract button and are hard to miss, your contract terms include only your rights and omit any mention of mutual obligations.

I am not able to enter a one-sided deal.

My sales through HackForums are strictly subject to a binding written agreement with a law firm. The codev on the project is not subject to the same restriction; that is his decision, but I will conduct this project properly and will not compromise.

I am not using this thread as a chatbox; if you have further questions, please send a private message.

Thank you for understanding my position.

Hello!

If you read the mutual terms again and compare them with your contract terms, you will clearly see what's missing.

You did not accept the mutual terms stated in the sales thread. Again, my sales through HackForums are strictly subject to a binding written agreement with a law firm. Relax, it's not that you won't accept any deals from my account, it's that I'm not going to do any business with you because I think you're a scammer. I've read several comments and reviews about you, especially the disputes you've had with other users, and you leave a lot to be desired. So, I'm the one who doesn't want to do business with you or use your platform. At first, I thought maybe you were an undercover cop or collaborator because of your strange attitude when selling or interacting with potential customers, but now that I've read the reviews, etc., I think you're more likely a scammer or a very low-quality seller. Of course, this isn't an accusation with proof since I don't have any, but these are things that can be seen publicly by visiting your profile. I won't wish you luck because I don't think you deserve it; I'm simply saying goodbye and never again.

Contracted member here.

I would like to comment on the hit piece on DarkVision posted by the previous poster.

Calling DarkVision a scammer and at the same time insinuating an LE association is pretty schizophrenic, if you ask me — and all that just by being told to follow a few guidelines, seemingly. When calling someone a cop, scammer, or anything else for that matter, remember that “it takes one to know one.”

My experience is that DarkVision is one of the most reliable and knowledgeable sellers on HF. I have also made several purchases from him outside HF and regularly use his tools myself without any issues.

So as a contracted member I can, with a clean conscience, vouch for DarkVision at any time of day, and I don't mind contradicting unfair posts like the one posted before mine.

I vouch for DarkVision a HQ seller.

1. Smooth or not depends on the crypter. Any decent private crypter gets the job done. Anyone in need of spoon feeding will obviously fail, but that's just how it's always been.

2. The thread is over three years old. Just check the feedback and see for yourself. Not sure what you're seeing, but I've noticed a couple of people calling scam without any proof. I read the posts as they just got burned elsewhere and came here to rage post.

3. With years of ratting experience, I'll just agree with the other guy's HQ remark.

DarkVision RAT is high quality, and for a paid tool, you really can't complain about paying $60 for a lifetime license.

Hope my reply was helpful.

Hehe, funny, because I just received the latest version of DarkVision without even clicking the olde button, and thought to myself, "Damn, updating is smooth," so updating definitely works great.

Are you sure your license is valid? Also, someone said they first used a custom email domain and didn't receive a response. Then they used Proton and had good feedback.

I think it (the gui) uses the onion window for the automatic check and clearnet for the button, or vice versa.

As Wells said, the updating in DV works well so it's weird if you can't update.

Based on posts in this thread, people are buying the tool from scammers, and updates are likely broken in those copies.

Interesting how some people, like the Russian who commented earlier about a "stealer" and was warned, fail to grasp that the tool owner, DarkVision, markets the tool for legitimate purposes, including legit security projects, as explained in the thread.

I'm a user myself and there is NO "stealer" available for that purpose.

Worth mentioning, because it's a great tool for both remote access and cybersec.

Perhaps his 2FA app is out of sync.

Delivery will be made as quickly as possible after payment is confirmed; the 24-hour window is the maximum and accounts for time-zone differences in some cases.

Hello,

I'm ready to purchase, but before I do, I have a few technical questions:

What OS does the server (Team Server) need to run on? Linux (Ubuntu/Debian) or Windows?

Does this tool support CDN (like Cloudflare) to hide the real server IP?

Does it support Domain Fronting? If so, is there a built-in feature or does it require manual configuration?

Are there any traffic obfuscation or HTTPS/mTLS options to make the traffic look normal?

What are the minimum specs (CPU/RAM) for the VPS?

Thank you. I just want to confirm these before paying.

Seriously, most of your questions are pretty irrelevant in the context of a P2P RAT like DarkVision, which makes your questions read more like jargon flexing, throwing around fluffy, unrelated terms such as domain fronting, CDN, and mTLS, which apply much more to HTTP botting than to P2P ratting. (I noticed you had posted the same question in other threads so perhaps you're just trolling.)

That's my interpretation. Feel free to frame it and put it on the wall, lol.

But I can vouch for the RAT, it's HQ if anyone wonders. I give it 5/5 RATs: ?????

Thanks for clarifying. You're right, I'm more familiar with traditional C2. I understand P2P works differently. My main concern is operational security. If I run DarkVision on a VPS, what's the risk of the VPS IP being detected and blocked? How does the P2P traffic appear on the network?

Fair point. I'm definitely coming from a traditional C2 mindset. Let me rephrase my concerns for a P2P RAT:

1. How do I ensure my VPS (the node I control) isn't easily taken down? Are there any recommended OPSEC practices?

2. What does the P2P traffic look like on the network? Is it easily identifiable as malicious?

I'm genuinely interested in the tool, not trolling. A trial would help me understand it much better than theory.

About your VPS question, perhaps you should check page one in the thread where the owner of the tool has a list of terms for various things, where one part specifically mentions VPS as an "unwanted" subject. It could be for legal reasons or to avoid association with other peoples projects, nevertheless it's there and I will only stick my face out this far in that matter.

(I use the tool as a RAT, no need to make things overly complicated. I'm typing on the phone. Typo award awaits me.) ?

Every order follows the same procedure.

Once a payment is confirmed, registration details are ALWAYS delivered WITHIN 24 hours MAXIMUM to the email address provided during purchase.

As stated in the terms, always use a common, reliable email service to avoid issues, and be prepared to check the spam folder.

All orders have been handled within 24 hours. Every delivery went through without rejections or bounces.

In short, your claim that you haven't received any registration details is simply a blatant lie.

If you made a payment, then check your spam folder according to THE TERMS located on the first page of the thread.

I will release the next version in just a few days. The version AFTER that will have the NEW builder.

However, anyone posting FAKE CLAIMS, TRASH, etc in violation of the TERMS can look for the update up their a, please pardon my French.

I have been under health related stress again lately, so your positive remark means a lot <3

No problem, dude. I'm replying now (late) because I just got back after being away for almost a full month and found your reply to my post.

I love your RAT, keep it up and take care of your health. ????

Thanks!

Your positivity is always appreciated. As I mentioned, this tool has lots of good, capable users, and you're definitely one of them. I can't say the same about the trolls who keep vomiting their trash in the thread.

The onion service used for internal checks was just updated, so you can fetch v1.49 automatically if you haven't downloaded it yet.

Have a great day!

Hello!

The onion service used for internal version checks has been updated, so if you don't have DarkVision RAT v1.49, you can fetch it automatically.

A new extension has been added to the tool. (I haven't updated the features list/image in the first post of the thread yet).

Thank you for reading.

hi, can you have the rat for phone ?? android or ios ??

Anbesili - August 30, 2026, 3:44 am

Cheapest/best rat on the market?

PremiumJoe - August 30, 2026, 10:57 pm

Just received new download info thru the auto updater. (Not sure if that's the Onion based one, but it works smoothly nonetheless.)

The new clipper works great, as expected. Like others, I always recommend using static build mode, regardless of the use case.

My vouch for DarkVision RAT. May this HQ tool never die, just as its developer, DarkVision, promised. lol

Rating: 5/5 rats and a mouse.

Can you tell if the rat is stealthy and stable for the connections? and don't close connections in general?

DarkVision's RAT also predates the AI explosion (copypaste hell), so it's good to see it being maintained. Anyone, even a kid, with basic skills can use the tool.

DarkVision, highly recommended. ?

Good to hear the project is alive and kicking. I've been "lingering" around this tool for a while, and I'll definitely consider buying it later.

Thanks, mate!

I received the update and it's working great, thank you.

If that Onion service is what handles the automatic checks (without needing to click the button), it's working really well.

Grazie Signore. lol ?

Dear!

I intend to purchase this tool (DarkVision RAT) and have been waiting for USDT or ETH payments to become available. Do you think either payment option will be offered through the payment service anytime soon, perhaps this month?

Sincerely :)

I can't comment on the payment options you asked about, but I can say from positive experience that the product itself, DarkVision RAT, is an affordable (and well maintained) native tool, which is why I have no problem recommending it to others, including you.

Hey Dark Vision.

Super excited to use your program.
However, I tried connecting with you.

The contract is still on awaiting approval,
I have already made the payment and sent you an email.

Thanks.

Reminder!

When creating a contract, please include a confirmation that you have read and accept the terms located in the first post of the thread.

Example terms: "DarkVision RAT Lifetime Access. I have read and agree to the terms."

Once you do this, I will be able to accept your contract.

Thank you for understanding.

I had not read this and had not written this.
I would like to inform here that I have read and agree to the terms.

Let me know if I should cancel the contract and redo again as i had not written the required phrase in contract.

THanks.

Noticing that you're asking the same HVNC-related question again and again, like a broken record, despite the replies. Also there's an ad at the top of the thread if you missed it.

In my opinion, and that of other experienced users, HVNC is a useless fantasy-sandbox feature, but I guess it works great for boosting sales, especially if you're a PARASITE selling other people's work on your website, right?

To remain on topic, DarkVision RAT has a remote browser.

Sorry, DarkVision, for ranting. I'll send you a message with info about this post.

I'm Stanley HF's helper bot. The OP (original poster) of this thread wants everyone to see this page and has elected to bump it to the top of the showthread listing. Since HF doesn't want a ton of LQP (Low Quality Posts) this is the best method of bumping your content. There is a small ?yte fee for each bump. Any OP can bump any of their threads on HF from the linked icon on the top of their first post.

If you haven't already read the first post of this thread we encourage you to do so.

Thanks,
Stanley

Hello!

Been away for a while due to health reasons.

Before the next major version (which will include the promised "One Optimal Build Mode") is released, two intermediate releases will be made available.

1. The first intermediate will feature an updated screen capture dialog with two rendering modes: one for regular stretching and another with clipping. The latter mode will allow you to scroll to the area of interest while preserving full quality, so you won't have to squint anymore. You will also be able to type in the quality value without having to use that damn up/down control.

2. The second intermediate release will offer "bundler" like functionality for embedding external content in the final output.

(Note that the list of current features in the first post of the thread hasn't yet been updated).

Please refrain from posting nonsense in my thread.

Thank you for reading.

When a new update is available, it can be accessed by clicking a button. The panel also displays an automatic notification via Onion.

The guy you quoted is clearly incompetent.

People should work on their technical skills instead of blaming a tool that works great.

Which Onion|?

Onion site has disconnected

the temp link is not working. the software update button is saying update check could not be performed please try again later

I don't know how to defend this.

What do you mean by "defend"? I'm just commenting on a tool that works great, based on experience. If someone makes idiotic claims, I contradict them.

I just checked by starting my previous 1.49 panel, and about half a minute later, the automatic update check showed a notification about the new version, 1.50. I have a valid license that has always worked reliably. Of course, connecting to an Onion service adds more lag than connecting to the clearnet, but updating has always been smooth. Perhaps you had a shitty circuit.

I don't think you have it. I'm still using version 1.39, even the plugins does not load and the damn thing is complicated. software updates should not be difficult to access. I even brought last year

People should work on their technical skills instead of blaming a tool that works great. I don't argue - the software is good, but technical support is absolutely nonexistent.
