So new idea for you all, it's been a while since I did one of these.

If the internet is going to change drastically with the implementation of AI into search engines, the most important thing will be teaching people words so they know what to ask the AI.

As such I propose the idea of "The Dictionary V2"

A dictionary with all the nonsense removed that everyone knows. All the words I have posted already in this thread wouldn't exist in it, because you already know and understand them.

Doing this would cut down the entire size of the dictionary to something more enticing for people to actually want to read.

Once people understand words and concepts better, using those to create/combine new things through AI assistance will become a much cleaner process. I still to this day believe some of the greatest inventions exist in 2 people's minds right now, with each of them specializing in those fields - however as they are unfamiliar with each other, those creations will never be made.

This brings me onto the second idea -

A website that is dedicated to not just science news, but all science fields but setup in a way where you can select two topics and the AI will try find a way to merge information from both topics to give new ideas.

Dude, you need to stop smoking weed.

But I see the idea here! Maybe it could actual be used to find solutions on complex problems, as we might have limited us self on "specific" solutions within the field.
