Thread: LiChess & CHESS.COM ELO BOOSTING + USERNAME CLAIMS

SchoolSlave - February 20, 2023, 12:20 pm

Riding the chess boom?

I can get you your desired chess.com handle; just PM me and I'll let you know if it is possible! No claim will exceed 200$! DO NOT MISS THIS OPPORTUNITY TO GET YOUR DREAM MONIKER ON ONE OF THE FASTEST GROWING GAMES, THAT HAS STOOD THE TEST OF TIME!

Basic requirements: 3+ characters, inactive for 3+ years.

I have not yet had anyone request for elo boosting, but I also am open to boosting accounts for people.

This will be completed by a Titled Player, meaning you will not get flagged for computer assistance, however buying this service violates Fair Play Policy (on LiChess and Chess.com). Because of this, after the service is complete, I cannot be held accountable for the account service as purchasing such a service is against the terms of service of most online chess platforms.

Can show proof of successful claims, just ask!

TAT is anywhere from 1-30 days because of the increased growth of the platform and game!

Not sure Andrew Tate's popularity increased ~50% 4 years in a row, with continued growth in popularity ?

I see what your saying though, but the difference here is chess has been "slept" on for centuries.

I agree, but if you look at chess players historically typically the best players in the world were born into wealth, etc. Chess has never had an economy, from the perspective of competing and displaying the game.

That's what I meant by "slept" on; it's without doubt the most prestigious "game."

If you want to flex a high rated account with a cool username to your friends, I am the guy for this.

Although I cannot guarantee account's from being banned due to the nature of the service breaching both platforms T.o.S, you can be assured that our service will not trigger a ban. And this will be apparent if the scenario were to occur with a customer by distinguishing the ban reason from "Fair Play Violation" versus "Abuse"; abuse meaning something triggered chess.com's systems regarding multiple accounts (no more than 2 per ip is allowed).
