Looks interesting. I believe that the Art of Invisibility is a good book to look into. Thanks for sharing this though. My previous cybersecurity professor from when I attended uni conducted a survey around 2007 and found out that it is virtually impossible to remove information from the internet once it is there. People should be mindful of this. Thank you for bringing that to the forum's attention.

unknownidentifier2000 - October 2, 2023, 6:06 am decent guide but i suggest using long but memorable sentence passwords as they have more entropy than random 12-20 digit strings (for example "How many cats have you eaten? 69,420!!!" is more secure than "f89vy7w9uj==++-"

One of the better write ups on this I've seen here. I wouldn't have minded a section on how Qubes works, because I've tried and was lost as fuck.

The rest I knew, but lots others don't. TAILS is a literal potential life saver. I can't remember what distraction they used on Ross Ulbricht, but unless it was a concussion grenade he should've pulled his USB. Almost cost him his life, and only didn't because theres zero chance he didnt have a large stash of bitcoin hidden. With the massive price raise he could be one of the technically richest in the world. So unless you have millions to purchase a presidential pardon, and have a corrupt enough administration to do that, you'd have gotten life like him. (Not saying it wasn't good. Freeing Ross Ulbricht was the best thing Trump has done I've seen. Ross is an international hero and Martyr to the war on drugs. One of the most harmful policies to the world to ever happen.)

Unrelated note: If the feds offer you 10 years, yes it feels like forever, but he wasn't going to win and losing trial will get you absolutely raped on time. Bullshit and completely goes against that we have a right to a trial. But somehow the feds need less evidence to convict, and also will make an example of you for exercising your right.

ShellPower - May 15, 2025, 6:10 am

The art of staying hidden start with understanding that you can't stay hidden.

In 90% of cases no one will proactively come for you - but if you are targeted, good luck with avoiding the dozens of slip ups you did along the way
