Thread: What Are Some Promising Altcoins?

Evil Bob - April 14, 2023, 8:08 am

Looking into buying some altcoins, hopefully before altseason. Which ones should I be looking at? I wanted to check out Polkadot and Vechain, are they still any good?

XRP, LTC, and LINK are safe plays. They'll catch up soon.

DOT I can see being a viable option. But how is Vechain good? Is it still relevant anymore? Asking because I don't see it talked about as much (if not at all).

What altseason?

Not gonna be any big boom in altcoins because btc will go down next week for sure.

We have seen these small pumps many times before.

I still think a wave of utility tokens for gamification is going to be huge. SAND maybe or MANA...imho worth holding small bags of those.

Rocketpool is one that you should look at especially if you are interested in ETH.

holding UTK and SAND

DGB, TRX, Matic are three altcoins with high trading volume and good features.

Sandbox, Uniswap, LTC, ETH & Azero are my top

I can't believe none of our shitcoin gurus mentioned PEPE on this thread.

"Which ones should I be looking at" Those most likely to be exposed to the media are SHIB, MATIC, Sand, Mana, and others. Although the multiverse projects are stopped because of disappointing sales figures, they remain safe values for swing trading during bull-run.

I would like to see an AI like in the Rialto era which will be massively used by ordinary investors and some Hedge Funds. Currently Silicon Valley is entirely in AI, in a few months/years we will have very nice/good project to trade that will be incorporated in financial institutions such as derivatives.

AI is the next-move, everybody likes the easy way. Anyone understanding that AI on the blockchain is generally a very retarded idea given the cost of compute/broadcast, training/deployment and other computational aspects. I am speaking here from a purely speculative point of view :)

To answer your question, yes, in my opinion Polkadot is still going strong, VeChain too, but is much less exposed than before!
