Thread: On the third day of studying hacking, thank you, Mr. Robot

Before coming to the hacker forum, I had registered for several forums. Compared to other forums, I felt that the hacker forum was more down-to-earth, with many amazing characters. Of course, like other forums, there were many bloggers eager to deceive new people (of course, like entering other forums, I was also scammed $500 on the hacker forum), but in comparison, I still felt more willing to stay in the hacker forum, So I decisively upgraded the membership of the forum and signed up for Mr. Robot's course. The content taught by Mr. Robot is directly practical. In these three days, I have learned a lot. Today, I am learning how to use Dirsearch for directory scanning. During the learning process, I also feel that what hackers do is actually very time-consuming and laborious. Thank you, Mr. Robot, for being willing to teach me, I also hope that through my own efforts, one day I can truly understand what hackers are and be able to integrate into the hacker forum family in a friendly manner

HF always makes me feel different from other forums and is gradually changing my understanding of hackers. It's like a tech guru like you is willing to take the time to leave a message for a new member of the forum, where I can always see hope,Thanks?

Thank you for trusting me. I think trust is worth a lot of money. If I don't understand anything, I will definitely pay you first. It's not that I have money, but that I think you are a trustworthy person

He literally just mentioned how to use dirsearch my guy xD it's not like that's all he is getting. He's just mentioning what he's currently working on learning.

I'm not some jerk off who is going to charge someone money for teaching them nothing.
