I have to agree,
it does look promising from the test results.

For common everyday use I use chrome, also because when I have to work and use all the functions of google and various stuff I use this. Instead I find it difficult to expose which I prefer, even if I think my vote goes to firefox with the necessary extensions and customizations that I like to do. Instead for other purposes, use a browser that is not chrome or just to have a pre-installed adblocker I use brave which I still consider a good alternative.
