Thread: Sui | Unlock the freedom to build powerful assets

Yin Yang - May 3, 2023, 4:44 am

Did anyone hear about <https://sui.io/>? I dont own any but BV1 might.

Sui is an innovative, decentralized Layer 1 blockchain that redefines asset ownership.

Quote:The SUI Token

Sui's native asset is called SUI. The token uses the capitalized version of SUI to distinguish the token from the Sui platform.

The total supply of SUI is capped at 10,000,000,000 (i.e. ten billion tokens). A share of SUI's total supply will be liquid at Mainnet launch, with the remaining tokens vesting over the coming years or distributed as future stake reward subsidies.

The SUI token serves four purposes on the Sui platform:

Users can stake SUI to participate in the proof-of-stake mechanism.

SUI is the asset denomination needed for paying the gas fees required to execute and store transactions or other operations on the Sui platform.

SUI can be used as a versatile and liquid asset for various applications including the standard features of money – a unit of account, a medium of exchange, or a store of value – and more complex functionality enabled by smart contracts, interoperability, and composability across the Sui ecosystem.

Its currently trading at $5 IOU, circulating supply is around 5B from 10B total supply. Thats $25B MC 2x of Cardano.

Been up since 3am prepping for mainnet launch :)

I've wanted to make a topic about Sui for over a year now \(Omni gets my alpha\), it's an impressive chain with a lot to unfold.

Narwhal + Bullshark is an impressive consensus mechanism being worked on by a lot of who I consider to be some of the brightest minds working in this space.

Move is a powerful and more importantly, safe to use, smart contract language.

Mysten Labs are a large and talented corporation, essentially a super team of cryptographers, engineers, economists, etc.

Sui Ecosystem is going to explode out of the gate. There is a ton of opportunity here, I've never seen such a large amount of effort by so many individual teams put in pre-mainnet for a network before. We have literally hundreds upon hundreds of projects ready to deploy to mainnet within days/weeks. Some of the largest bridges are already working on opening up avenues to and from Sui.

Sui is huge for Web3 gaming

Sui is huge for DeFi

Sui is huge for wide-scale adoption + scaling (parallelism and simple transactions that can bypass consensus (Single Writer Apps / Transactions on Single Owner Objects))

SUI-3183372 - May 3, 2023, 9:08 am

(May 3, 2023 08:58 AM)Focus Broken Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) If your transactions can bypass consensus, what stops you from double spending or spending without the correct witness?

Many transactions such as coin or object transfers, NFT minting, and smart contract publishing can be expressed as operations on single-owner objects that can be used in transactions by only one address at a time. Sui automatically recognizes such transactions and leverages this observation to forgo consensus. Instead, Sui uses simpler algorithms based on Byzantine Consistent Broadcast.

I remember this being mentioned between us and took a look. Nice to see it moving and launching and not taking 2-3 years like Radix to come to market.

<https://sui.io/>

I just don't know in a crowded field how this will do for market pricing.

(May 3, 2023 01:05 PM)Omniscient Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I just don't know in a crowded field how this will do for market pricing.

I think Sui is the first chain that will be able to properly capture web3 gaming, and not shitty Axie Infinity games, but true AAA games, with fun gameplay and [hopefully] less focus on cash grab shammy style gameplay. There are very large game studios already working on games built on Sui, and it's one of their leading focuses for new partnerships.

Sui will attract money from other chains when it comes to DeFi and NFTs and stuff like that. Sui will attract new money from outside of web3 through gaming, in my opinion.

Yin Yang - May 3, 2023, 3:25 pm

For the average user. Don't. Wait until november or sell it off like someone above has done if you got lucky.

Why november? Because of how the structure of token release and availability is set up. Huge selling pressure is on its way.

{ RadioActive Hack } - May 3, 2023, 9:13 pm

Its over valued and the price will drop. The vesting cycle is going to aggressively dump the price at some point. Be warned.

I think the project has a lot of things going for it, but the current price is incredibly high and completely unsustainable. Only 5% of the coins are released at the moment.

Do not Hodl this crypto, get in at the short term if you want, but please be aware that there will be a dump and you need to get out before this happens.

Programmable Transaction Blocks on Sui

<https://docs.sui.io/testnet/build/prog-trans-ts-sdk>

<https://blog.sui.io/sui-performance-update/>

<https://explorer.sui.io/txblock/HZAVg4VQRfQSUYLpQEWUD9KQrKpv9XrE8pRgoqBrYVUK?network=https%3A%2F%2Fexplorer-rpc.mainnet.sui.io%3A443>

What happened?

Look at the txn above. Interesting impact for payments/commerce applications. 1 SUI was sent to each of 98 validators through a PTB transaction. This required taking a single SUI object as input and splitting off 98 new ones.

What did it cost?

The total cost of this transfer was 0.097833880 SUI = 1M MIST of computation fee + (98+1)*988,000 MIST new object storage fees - 0.99 988,000 MIST non-refundable storage fees.

Meaning that each individual transaction cost $0.097833880/98 = 0.0009983$ SUI. essentially what's happening is that in the batched transaction, the computation fee of 1M MIST is split across the 98 transfers and each transfer pays its full storage fees.

Overview

From a naive interpretation, one might think that this does not buy much. If the transaction were done with a single P2P transfer it would've cost the full 1M MIST in computation plus the storage fees associated with touching two objects. So $1M + (1+1)*988,000 \text{ MIST} - 0.99 \cdot 988,000 = 0.001997880 \text{ MIST}$. This is about 2x as high as in the batched case so we got a 50% discount in each transfer 0.001997880 vs 0.0009983 which is cool but not groundbreaking.

Digging into the details

Here's the catch: in a world where Sui has grown and is in steady state, the number of object creations and deletions should somewhat offset each other and new object creation nets out to roughly zero. In this world a payments processor would routinely sent transactions from A->B but also from B->A. So in this example, what this means is that the 98 objects that were created would probably come after 98 previous objects were deleted. thus leaving net object creation at zero. Under this more sophisticated interpretation the gains from batching are really high, because the comparison asks us to ignore storage fees:

-- a single P2P transfer would cost 0.001M SUI

-- a batched transfer of 98 objects as in this case would roughly cost $1M/98 = 0.000010204$ SUI. a 100x decrease!!

TLDR:PTB transactions are awesome and very cost efficient.

Clutchy.io, Souffl3, Keepsake, and BlueMove are all NFT launchpads that I pay attention to looking out for mints.

Edit: I've been using desktop wallets. I had tried using Elli and Glass wallets to mint from mobike while I was on vacation, however I didn't have luck. This was 1 day post mainnet launch though, unsure if things are better now.

No unbonding time, there's no reason not to stake!

Whenever you need your Sui, get the Sui + rewards back instantly.

Aftermath Finance launching a liquid staking protocol soon too. Stake SUI with them for similar returns as staking your SUI normally, and get afSUI back which you can continue trading with and use on other DeFi protocols.

I've already mentioned the crowded field. I just don't see going forward how anything less than true innovation in the space is going to gain any attention or market.

The whitepaper is about 11 pages with 1 just for citations. Other than some language about smart contracts I'm not seeing where this is ground-breaking blockchain.

This page does a better job explaining the benefit...

<https://medium.com/mysten-labs/why-we-created-sui-move-6a234656c36b>

Basically Sui Move (Move is the name of their internal language) makes some shorter code than potentially other blockchains. It's apparently Rust based.

Sui uses Validators (like Radix or Dash) and is PoS.

<https://docs.sui.io/learn/architecture/validators>

I have yet to find metrics for throughput (TPS). I wonder if they can do 100k TPS at least?

I'm not in a good spot to reply to this right now, but there are a lot of qualities of Sui that set it apart from your run of the mill chains that we've seen come out over the last 4-5 years.

Parallelism is Sui's biggest selling point in my opinion. Many blockchain transactions involve non-overlapping states, Sui capitalizes on this and processes these in parallel. In contrast to traditional blockchains, Sui validates transactions individually rather than batching them into blocks. This approach ensures low latency, as each successful transaction quickly obtains a certificate of finality that proves the transaction will be processed by the Sui network.

For transactions that involve objects owned by a single address, the validators on the Sui blockchain do not require consensus to process them. Instead, they execute these transactions in parallel at high throughput, utilizing Byzantine Consistent Broadcast. However, for transactions that involve shared objects (i.e., objects that can be modified by more than one user), consensus is required and achieved via a high-throughput DAG-based consensus protocol called Bullshark.

This is fantastic for NFT minting, on-chain gaming, simple coin transfers, etc.

Performance update from a few months ago boasts very impressive numbers:

<https://blog.sui.io/sui-performance-update/>

Touched on this earlier, but single Writer Friendly Applications / simple transactions allow certain transactions to bypass the consensus engine and instead :

<https://docs.sui.io/learn/single-writer-apps>

Consensus engine is the result of many years of research by some of my favorite cryptographers and academics in the space:

I've never really liked extension wallets either, but it's what we've got for now.

As for validators, I'm delegating to a friend's node (Blockvision), so it's not the optimal return, just wanted to support friends.

I'm sure in time we'll see different nodes start incentivizing themselves in various ways, but I haven't seen a lot of that yet. (I think there are a few who perform monthly lotteries amongst their delegators and give a Sui rewards to a winner every month).

SUI seems less like blockchain and more like clearinghouse technology. Same could be said of Radix I suppose too.

On the SUI site they define themselves as L1 Blockchain. Whereas Radix literally has no mention of the word "blockchain" on their home page. They call themselves a DLT (Distributed Ledger Technology), which I think SUI falls into the category.

I know I'm getting into nitpicking about terms but it bothers me that something is advertising something it is not. I'm saying very little that's important about their technology though.

I was unaware that this testing was taking place, so when I saw the chain at 140k TPS I was shocked and took a screenshot:

The 140k figure from my screenshot was on network of I believe 98 community validators and 2-4 Mysten validators. The larger figure that Mysten boasts is on a private testnet they control. They were running tests on both, but the larger and more resource intensive tests were done on their private testnet.

(Jun 7, 2023 02:00 PM)Omniscient Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Just comparing to guess market reaction. You can't be Ethereum or Bitcoin anymore. And if Sui just does similar to Radix, and XRD has performed poorly, then what makes you think Sui can perform well in the market? Builders and smart contracts on mainnet launch.

Sui has hundreds of projects being built on it, and this is excluding NFTs. Day 1 the biggest bridges were supporting Sui, allowing USDC, USDT, and pretty much all EVM and Cosmos assets to exist on Sui. Day 1 you didn't need to buy in from an exchange, you could have bridged your eth or sol or whatever over and swapped it for Sui on any number of fully operational swaps or DEX's. Sui's NFT landscape is already moving millions in volume.

Sui has reasons for new money to enter its ecosystem. Projects like Radix, Aleph Zero, etc, we hope that what they have built will attract builders to begin building on chain, to give reasons for new money to flow in. So far, they've failed to do that. AZERO has smart contracts now and it's a ghost town. Price has been steadily falling. Radix, they're coming soon, and we can only hope builders will follow.

Edit: Sui is also the first blockchain that can support web3 gaming on a massive scale. Games that people may actually want to play can be built now, evolve past those shitty cash grab games (that's not to say shitty cash grabs won't exist, they certainly will).

Omniscient - June 7, 2023, 3:01 pm

Well pricing wise it's hitting new lows.

Right now the only real safe play imho is Bitcoin. For all we know Sui could drop to 10 cents before it begins to move the needle. Again, to compare, same as Radix. I bought XRD at peaks of pricing, not going to make that mistake again. I will wait for market to play out, continue to soften, and see if anything takes hold beyond hype.

Technology is only part of the key, adoption and actual usage is the rest. You of course did mention that so I'm just repeating it because it's that important to note.

EDIT: Quickly I can see Sui hitting $100m cap or less which means 20 cent pricing or less needs to be achieved.

There are monthly unlocks from pre-sales as well as various larger unlocks looming on the horizon. There will be continuous downward pressure on Sui on the short term. The hope is something, or numerous things, being built on Sui can flip the narrative and create enough buy pressure, but it's a pipe dream currently.

Aptos, another Move based chain, lost ~65% of its value over its first 2 months before its ecosystem took hold and began drawing money into it, and Sui has more projects being built, better projects being built, and builders who have built on both chains have boasted that Sui is favorable to build on, so the hope is that Sui should draw a larger share of Move developers long term.

I am not saying buy Sui right now. I continue to tell people I'm losing on all of my Sui buys so far. What I am saying is keep an eye on it, especially what's being built on Sui. The ecosystem is going to present a lot of opportunity, and the chain is capable enough to support a thriving ecosystem.

Yes I am. It is a scam site.

Scammers have been airdropping NFT "tickets" into wallets trying to lead Sui users to malicious sites.

Sui doesn't work like EVM chains, so you don't need to revoke any contract from being able to access your coins, but you do need to ensure you have disconnected any active connection from that dApp.

In the official Sui wallet, hit 'Apps' at the bottom, switch to the 'Active Connections' tab, and then locate the malicious connection and disconnect.

No it's not. It's a good price to sell.

It's a good price to minute trade, the best prices are the ones you'll see next april. New data is available on site to show why.

Until april, all you're gonna see is sideways movements, probably, with new lower lows. Unless you stake, you might not get returns in this market. Even if you stake, the odds are still stacked against you.

If you absolutely must buy due to yolo and fomo, DCA is the way but it is risky as hell given the available data. Even DCA is hard to sell as an investment choice because it keeps dropping in mcap relative to other coins..

If you trade by the minute, all sui prices are relatively good except the higher number (e.g. buy low sell high). Especially in a sideways-moving market with new lower lows, just be aware that this kind of behaviour devalues the coin further if done en masse. Whoever said you can't make a profit in a bear market is an idiot. Buy low sell high, rinse and repeat.. Minute trading is more profitable now than DCA-ing is in a bear, except you need the guts and mental preparations to be able to do it and even then most traders lose against the big players. Hard sell either way. Risk = 10/10. Normies should stick with btc.

Sui recently also hit the record for most transactions by a blockchain in a single day (65.8 million). As a disclaimer, these transactions were not meaningful, they stemmed from a game, but it did demonstrate that with elevated throughput and network congestion, Sui fees stayed consistent and minimal. Sui also crossed the 1b transactions threshold in mid August.

Unfortunately I think we're in a moment of the market where the best technology may not matter as much. The market has become so diluted with scams that unless you're already a well-known and trusted brand, that whatever promises your technology offers, it's not going to move the needle on adoption. Maybe I'm wrong on that or maybe it's just temporary.

I think your gamification statement is legit though that a day will come where throughput for a massive mmorpg will matter. When will it happen, impossible to say, but even more impossible is knowing which blockchain will be used.

I also think that whatever blockchain is used for gamification, will require that it's super cheap. The overall ecosystem might be worth billions but transactions will need to cost fractions of a penny and if the token value goes too high it will actually hurt the gaming ecosystem. That's my conclusion about seeking value from these blockchains targeting gaming. Same applies to blockchains that want to be storage. If the value is too high, the storage utility is untenable.

SUI seems like solid project though.

SUI-3183372 - September 22, 2023, 1:56 pm

Maintain Sui's Health and Earn Storage Rebates - Sui Storage Fund rebates, a unique feature of Sui, incentivize the Sui community to maintain a healthy Sui network.

<https://blog.sui.io/deepbook-storage-fund-bot/>

Sui charges a storage fee along with gas fees when a transaction creates an object on the network. That storage fee goes into the Sui Storage Fund, which uses a staking mechanism to compensate network operators for maintaining on-chain storage. This design takes into consideration that operators may join and leave the network at any time, maintaining the fund in order to support operators who join after the objects they store were created.

As with all networks, unused files and other artifacts accumulate over time and take up an increasing amount of drive space. When the available storage space becomes fully used, service and performance degrades. On Sui, increased storage demands mean operators need to increase their storage capacity to ensure a performant network.

Deleting an object from Sui, such as an expired DeepBook order, frees up the space the associated objects occupied. Because storage fees are charged up front and for the life of an object, Sui returns 99 percent of the original storage fee as a rebate in SUI tokens. Storage fees on Sui are very low, so the rebate for a single deletion is correspondingly low. Although the transaction involved in deleting an object incurs a gas fee, in many cases the storage fee rebate exceeds the gas fee, resulting in a net positive outcome.

More on storage fees on Sui: <https://blog.sui.io/storage-fees-explained/>

Our Journey with Bluefin Classic has been remarkable, and we thank all of our early users and the Arbitrum ecosystem for their trust and support. As we wind down this chapter, we encourage our users to manage their positions as required (more details here). The focus now shifts to Bluefin v2 powered by Sui, where we aim to offer traders a more performant, low-cost, and Web2-like user experience - as we announced earlier this year. Here's what's been achieved since the launch of v2:
Growth in December: $103M/day in average volume, 80%+ DEX market share on Sui

Performance: ~550ms finality, 5,400+ peak TPS

Eliminating Wallets: Users only need a Google account to sign up and trade

Lower Cost of Execution: Gas fees are below $0.005 on v2, and currently fully-sponsored by the Bluefin Foundation

Sui's performance and focus on user experience align with our priorities as we continue to build a platform for both professional traders and first-time users. Given that we've seen liquidity and volume scale very rapidly on Bluefin v2, we will be winding down Bluefin Classic and focusing on releasing new features and upgrades on Sui.

What's Coming Up In Q1, 2024

Since its release in September, Bluefin v2 has processed over $2.3 billion in trading volume. We want to build a platform that can compete with and capture market share from centralized exchanges - and Sui enables us to do this. This includes supporting new features as well as overcoming performance limitations and user experience friction:

Expected in Early February, with rolling milestone releases earlier
Account Abstraction: zkLogin, Walletless, Built-in Bridging, 1 Click Trading - Users only need a Google account to sign up and trade. No wallets are required. This enables us to unlock the security benefits of decentralized trading to the border cryptocurrency derivatives market

Enhanced Retail UI - Redesigned UI Web & Mobile Friendly, Immediate Position Updates, Chart order & position indicators, New depth chart, Integrated funding rate chart, Market & Index candles, Notifications

Expected End of March
Breakthrough Performance & Cross-Margining - 30ms Trades, Cross Margin, Isolated Sub Accounts, More Markets - as a result, users can receive trade confirmations within 30ms, and can validate their trades on-chain within 550 ms. Because of parallel execution (throughput currently scaling over 5400 TPS), there will be minimal lags during extremely volatile market conditions unlike most Ethereum L2s Bullish on Bluefin. Embracing Sui's new tech to create one of the greatest trading platforms in all of web3.

Use Suiscan.xyz or Suivision.com, both are improvements over the official Sui Explorer.

yeah been using suivision, prefer it to suiscan. and tbf its better than most explorers that aren't under the etherscan umbrella; just find it hard to follow people through their transaction logs (maybe this is just a layer of privacy sui offers, tbh didnt read the whitepaper) and sui wallet had random merchandise ads all over it

There are a couple of new explorers that have received grants that are being worked on, and SuiVision have hit pause on all their non-Sui related projects, so we should see improvements in this area over 2024.

Weird, I'm up 3.4x on over 75,000 SUI.

I guess I could have gotten really lucky and bought the Bitcoin bottom and 3-4x'd that way, however some basic DCA'ing into SUI has made me more money this year than anything else.

My weekly BTC purchases have not fared as well as my weekly SUI purchases. Odd.

Also should mention the consistent 40-60% APY returns you receive in the DeFi scene on SUI without adding exposure to anything else but SUI and no way to be liquidated. It's been the easiest money of my life. $75-100+ per day delivered to my wallet.

I'm in the SUI/afSUI LP farm on Aftermath Finance. Rates are lower right now, about 35% APR last I checked.

I'm long Sui so I want to choose a pool/pair that allows me to keep my exposure on just Sui, while getting the best rates possible. Aftermath allows me to earn 35%+ APR while maintaining 100% of my position in Sui or a Sui pegged LST.

There are also SUI/haSUI and SUI/vSUI pools on Cetus, but SUI/afSUI has historically had the best returns.

99% fake, a scam group have ramped up sending out fake NFTs and Coins trying to lure users to scam pages to accept malicious transactions.

There are various legitimate airdrops taking place on Sui, Bluefin, SuiNS, Deepbook, to name a few, but scammers are attempting to take advantage of the hype by deploying fake airdrops to try and steal funds.

Big vote of confidence coming from Circle to launch on Sui, and will help improve the Sui DeFi landscape.

This also paves a clearer path for the Sui Native Bridge to launch later this year.

Edit: Speaking of DeFi landscape, moving into the #9 spot for TVL seems imminent:

Anything Circle related imho is bad news for crypto. I consider them the absolute worst in the entire ecosystem. That includes Coinbase who would be #2.

I get it that they are big in the industry but they keep being a problem. IMHO they're more interested in backend technology they can control like a CBDC. They are not crypto people, they are legacy financial market people.

I only need to ask one question of AI to have my beliefs confirmed.

They are the only stable who continuously fails to block threat actors from transferring massive amounts of money, even when positively identified.

However, I can't deny the benefit that they bring to any DeFi ecosystem. I'd prefer Tether (I know, I know... That's an entirely separate can of worms), but I'll take either of the big two to help on-board new users.

Walrus is an interesting development coming to Sui. Unsure if it moves the price much, but it furthers the decentralized internet narrative and will begin proving protocols like IPFS, Arweave, Filecoin, and Storj to be obsolete.

Didn't expect to see the DEEP airdrop 3x in value post-TGE.

<https://www.coingecko.com/en/coins/deepbook>

Normally you see the token price plummet after an airdrop event, however the DEEP airdrop was based on research that rewarding the community with a larger chunk of the total supply actually leads to a more stable environment post-airdrop, and we've seen just that with a 3x increase in token price.

SuiNS' $NS token airdrop is 2 weeks out. Will not be as impactful as DEEP, but another event to look forward to.

IKA HAS LAUNCHED ON SUI!

Ika offers a revolutionary alternative to traditional blockchain bridges, enabling seamless cross-chain interactions without compromising security. Through its ultra-fast MPC network, Ika allows developers to tap into the liquidity of major networks—like Bitcoin, Ethereum, and Solana—while leveraging the speed and programmability of Sui. This eliminates many of the risks associated with centralized bridging solutions, empowering developers to create applications that are secure, scalable, and fast.

Key Features of Ika on Sui
Programmable Bitcoin: Ika brings programmable Bitcoin to Sui, enabling developers to integrate native BTC directly into DeFi applications and custody solutions.

DeFi Interoperability: Ika's network allows for instant, secure operations across Web3 ecosystems, bringing liquidity from major blockchains like Bitcoin and Ethereum to Sui's smart contracts.

Decentralized Custody: The platform offers secure and decentralized custody solutions, delivering unmatched security for institutional and individual users alike.

Chain Abstraction: With Ika, builders can abstract the complexity of interacting with multiple chains, providing a seamless user experience.

AI Agent Guardrails: Ika's MPC technology introduces secure guardrails for AI applications on Sui, safeguarding user assets and ensuring AI agents do not operate without appropriate oversight.

Why Sui and Ika are a Perfect Fit

The integration of Ika into Sui is no coincidence—both platforms share a commitment to performance, speed, and decentralization. Ika's 2PC-MPC cryptographic scheme leverages Sui's Mystici consensus, ensuring that transactions are processed with sub-second latency and extreme scalability. This synergy between Sui's robust architecture and Ika's unparalleled MPC technology will drive new advancements in cross-chain finance, decentralized security, and digital asset management.

According to Omer Sadika, Co-Founder of Ika, "Sui is the fastest execution venue for cross-chain programmable BTC, DeFi, decentralized custody, Chain Abstraction, and AI agent guardrails." This alignment of values is expected to catalyze the next generation of blockchain innovation, making Sui a prime destination for developers building high-performance, decentralized applications.

Unprecedented Performance and Security

Ika's network offers 10,000 signatures per second across hundreds or even thousands of signer nodes, a massive leap from traditional MPC networks that often struggle with latency and scalability. The use of the Zero Trust Protocol ensures that user assets are secure even in worst-case scenarios, setting new benchmarks for decentralized security. Sui Foundation's strategic investment in Ika underscores the mutual dedication to cutting-edge technology, solidifying the partnership as a cornerstone for future Web3 advancements. The funding, supported by leading figures in the blockchain ecosystem, showcases the community's confidence in Ika's technology and potential.

You'll need the tokens in a wallet that can interact with DeFi applications, so you'll need to find a wallet that you want to use. I recommend the official Sui Wallet, Suiet, or Stashed. Your wallet will also need a small amount of SUI to pay for gas associated with every transaction performed from this wallet.

1. Send the NS tokens and a small amount of SUI (1 would be enough) to a SUI wallet.

2. Connect your wallet to Aftermath's dashboard (<https://aftermath.finance/>)

3. Deposit your NS tokens into the NS/SUI pool (

<https://aftermath.finance/pools/0xee7a281296e0a316eff84e7ea0d5f3eb19d1860c2d4ed598c086cea9bf78c75>). In return, you will receive af_lp tokens that represent your share of the pool.

4. Take the af_lp tokens you just received and stake them in the NS/SUI farm ( <https://aftermath.finance/farms/0x20a996755ef9cd3bc5a7458cfa4a5a3a392cc92934779c2e908ff9c24f8d54aa>)

The rates have dropped to 200%-400% APY. 200% is the base rate, and it can increase up to 400% if you lock your stake for up to 14 days. Please note that since SUI and NS token prices are not correlated, this position is at risk of impermanent loss and you should monitor your position accordingly

Last night a malformed transaction crashed enough validators to halt block production / processing of transactions. Bug in a recent update caused the crash. Bug was fixed and block production was restored after about 2 hours of downtime.

84% of validators had pushed the fix out within about 90 minutes of it being available.

Incredibly, Sui is getting positive attention from this event on socials. Transparency is key it seems, and Sui had been updating its community through out the entire event. Broader web3 community is just using it as another example as to why "Sui is the next Solana".

Alright so let's try to analyze about some upside. If Sui is #17 market cap now how far can it go. Cardano is #9 currently. Let's speculate then that Sui can hit the #10 position and under current market caps that's $30B+. It's a 300% multiple and would put Sui over $10.

I think to do that though it has to reach the Asian markets especially Hong Kong to beat Tron (#11 cap).

Any demographics you can post?

I know I already missed a 300% return rate when I could have bought at under $1.

If Cardano can be #9 while supporting just double digit TPS, I don't see any reason why Sui can't easily break into the top ten. We've seen plenty of other coins more capable than Cardano try and fail, but between Sui Foundation and Mysten Labs, you have 200 talented, full time individuals, working their butts off to build the best chain possible. I don't think we've seen such a large, serious, and disruptive new organization enter web3 since IOHK. Not to mention, Cardano's largest DEX by volume is fed up with no progress on Cardano, they are currently working on their migration to Sui. They've done well embedding themselves into the Sui community on alt accounts while they build out their new app.

Realistically, there isn't a lot of fierce competition in between us and Solana/BNB. TON, Tron, Cardano don't have any advantages over similarly ranked chains, let alone Sui. TON has the Telegram selling point, Tron has Justin Sun, and Cardano has Charles. Without each of those singular selling points, those 3 chains are dead in the water, the chains themselves are trash. Shib, Doge, and XRP are memes, who knows what the future holds for them. AVAX is a decent competitor only a few billion ahead of us, but again, with no real advantages over Sui. Their killer app, Shrapnel, is looking to add Sui support after their Avalanche c-chain is still proving to not be able to handle the throughput they need. It's not until you start looking at BNB or Solana that you get an idea of where Sui should be sitting in my opinion. Sui is far superior to BNB, but BNB has so much infra set up that they've solidified themselves as a top chain forever. Solana is the only fierce competition that Sui has, Sui out-edges Solana in terms of tech, but not by a wide margin like it does every other chain I've mentioned so far. Solana can hold a candle to Sui.

If we're only considering L1's, I view Sui as a top 5 chain and that's what I'm holding for. I think it's #1 in terms of capability, but with the head starts ETH, BNB, and SOL have, Sui trails in terms of infrastructure supporting it and sheer number of apps built.

I don't have demographics to share with you currently, but I'm sure I can get my hands on them. I can say that Asia is a target market for Sui right now, with a physical offices opening in Vietnam and Dubai recently, with additional spaces in Singapore and China (HK) coming soon. The US has suddenly become a key market for Sui as well. Over the past 2 years, efforts in NORAM have been minuscule due to regulatory uncertainty and the SEC already showing interest in Sui, but with Republicans taking a clean sweep, reinvigorated interest in the US is becoming apparent. India is another emerging market within Sui right now. There was always an interest there, but similar to the US, lightening regulations is allowing Sui to more freely enter India.

My job won't be finished until Sui dethrones the shitters and solidifies its self amongst the best.

I did some native and some liquid. What's the difference and is there a recommended validator to get drops or something?

Staking natively offers the lowest returns, but with no added risk. The validator that you stake to generally doesn't matter, some may offer higher rates but we're talking a small fraction of a percent higher. We have not yet seen validators incentivize staking to their nodes like we've seen on other chains. Staking and unstaking is generally instantaneous (I think there is a scenario where unstaking can take 1 epoch (1 day)), with stake rewards taking an extra epoch to unlock. If you're not going to do anything else, staking is perfectly fine.

Liquid staking offers you your same returns as native staking (minus platform fees), but also gives you a new token in return when you stake your SUI. This token is considered a 'liquid staked' version of SUI, and is used in Sui DeFi to earn additional yield. I personally utilize liquid staking over native staking. Liquid Staking does introduce an extra degree of risk, where you must trust the package (smart contract) providing the swaps/lockups taking you from SUI to the liquid staked version of SUI.

Historically, I have staked my SUI through Aftermath, which provides afSUI in return. I then use my afSUI to participate in Aftermath's DeFi landscape, specifically depositing it into the afSUI/SUI liquidity pool. Once I receive my LP tokens from that, I stake those LP tokens on Aftermath for additional yield. I choose this strategy, the SUI/afSUI pool, because the assets deposited are correlated, which eliminates the risk of impermanent loss. I'm a lazy investor, I like to set and forget my strategies.

With that being said, returns on liquid staked SUI are the lowest I've ever seen right now. You'd only earn an additional 6% following the method above, in the past Yin Yang and I have seen rates north of 50%.

Cetus liquid staked SUI farms: <https://app.cetus.zone/farms>

Aftermath liquid staked SUI farm (requires a lock up for max yield):

<https://aftermath.finance/farms/0xe680066288f8ae8120ff9b5a7accfed974cdfdb07bae9a38b43ee3edf505a7e>

Navi lending platform: <https://app.naviprotocol.io/>

Scallop lending platform: <https://app.scallop.io/>

Suilend lending platform: <https://suilend.fi/dashboard>

A slightly easier strategy for similar returns would be to stake your SUI with Navi/Volo, receive vSUI in return, and then lend your vSUI on Navi for 6% APY.

In both strategies you're earning your normal stake + DeFi yields.

The bulk of my funds are currently on AlphaFi right now though. AlphaFi automates complex strategies in the Sui ecosystem to maximize yields, generally through a series of looped lends and borrows. I took some profits on SUI and have the USDC earning 22% on AlphaFi right now. They have another new USDC pool boasting closer to 50% returns, but I haven't investigated it yet nor have I seen if there is any risk associated. They have an assortment of strategies to earn on just about whatever you're holding.

AlphaFi's SUI strategy for example (Click to View) About The Strategy

Your SUI is converted to vSUI at Volo and supplied to the Navi lending market. SUI is then borrowed against your vSUI collateral, converted back to vSUI, and the process is repeated up to four times to maximize APYs. The risk is minimized by using correlated assets and having vSUI as collateral

This looping strategy increases your collateral, boosting rewards from Navi. Meanwhile, the interest earned on the supplied vSUI is auto-compounded multiple times daily, accelerating the growth of your deposit. Additionally, you'll earn extra ALPHA rewards along the way!

No Deposit Fee: There is no upfront deposit fee, ensuring that all of your capital is immediately put to work.

No Borrow Fee: You won't be charged the 0.2% borrow fee to Navi while using this strategy (typically higher, as the contract supplies and borrows multiple times to increase collateral and APYs). We cover all associated costs through the 20% performance fee on the yield.

Wallets have always been a bit of a pain point on Sui.

Ethos, the community favorite, failed to find a sufficient revenue model and had to close their doors. The official Sui Wallet, while suitable, can become laggy if you own too many visual assets. Suiet is probably the best current contender, but I fear are following in Ethos' footsteps and aren't doing enough to capture revenue for long term sustainability.

However, the #1 wallet on Solana just announced their expansion into Sui. Phantom Wallet is here!

This is fairly impactful news. Binance began showing preferential treatment towards FDUSD when they decided (were forced to decide) to wind down BUSD last year. FDUSD gets a massive amount of daily volume on Binance, but it has failed to gain traction on-chain so far. While not a large stable compared to USDC/USDT, FDUSD has gained about $1.4b in market cap over the last year, although it is down from its peak in May of this year.

The BLUE airdrop I don't know the entire criteria for. A decent chunk of it came from my trading activity on their app. I maintained a balance of greater than $1k and produced over $250k in trade volume (they offer leverage trading so it was easy to generate this volume), setting me to platinum status on their platform.

SEND had a dozen different criteria to get you small chunks of their airdrop. Utilizing the Suilend platform, holding specific NFTs, etc

If you click view full list on this page, you can see the various ways you could have gotten involved:

Aye, I know about Send, dumb of me to move my SUI into the wallet, was doing good with lending SOL and having nice USDC/USDT amounts so I don't get liquidated. Was earning 3-5 SEND per day, but I chickened out.

I worry that could cause inflation issues and fake transactions just to earn Sui through mist. If you're being paid a fee for transaction, what's to stop someone from going ape and creating millions of transactions? Or am I not understanding the post?

I was only paid a fee because of the circumstances around my trade. I had many afSUI coin objects, and as I swapped them into SUI, it consolidated them into a singular SUI coin object. So the only reason I earned SUI, albeit a minuscule amount, is because I physically freed up storage capacity on-chain. If my swap was just a singular coin object for a singular coin object, where my footprint on chain stays the same or grows, I would have paid a fee.

There are details on storage rebates here: <https://blog.sui.io/deepbook-storage-fund-bot/>

Walrus is currently in testnet.

You can swap Testnet SUI for Testnet WAL on the Walrus staking dashboard

<https://stake.walrus.site/>

You can get Testnet SUI in the testnet faucet channel within the Sui Discord.

I don't know the total supply of WAL, don't think tokenomics are out yet.

Yes, they are swapped 1:1.

Testnet SUI and testnet WAL are worthless so there shouldn't be any fear in doing so. Make sure you switch your wallets network from Mainnet to testnet or the transactions will fail.

Odd that Base is there too considered it's a L2 solution. Kind of surprised but I guess it's the people using ETH as L1 and realizing the problems thinking that by going L2 under Base they are solved. Which they are not. Fees get lower but it's top TPS is about 105. That's just not enough to build on. Either 100k+ TPS or you ain't shit imho. And yes, I know currently Sui is saying 300k TPS.

Bucket TGE is announced and airdrop farming opened up.

You can visit the TGE launchpad here: <https://tge.bucketprotocol.io/>

By navigating to the airdrop tab, you can see if you've already performed actions or hold coins/nfts that have will yield you $BUT in the airdrop.

You can also participate in their public sale from this panel when it goes live, however be aware that tokens are locked up and staked for one year. You will receive deBUT tokens until that point so you can still participate in governance and earn revenue from the protocol.

You can also use capital that you have on-chain to farm additional $BUT in the upcoming aidrop through their farm panel: <https://farm.bucketprotocol.io/>

Kriya is a dex and they offer automated yield strategies as well, either through leveraged lending or lp rebalancing.

Kriya is launching a token and having an airdrop. By interacting with Kriya over the past few weeks, you could earn MAYA. MAYA that you earn and then burn within the airdrop panel is given back as KDX, Kriya's token, during their TGE airdrop event.

You can also sell your MAYA on the open market if you don't want to participate in the airdrop, or if you think you can get more value out of selling it. I personally built 2 accounts up through burning MAYA to rank in the top 250 for their airdrop, and then I sold all of my MAYA after that.

You can also sell your MAYA on the open market if you don't want to participate in the airdrop, or if you think you can get more value out of selling it. I personally built 2 accounts up through burning MAYA to rank in the top 250 for their airdrop, and then I sold all of my MAYA after that.

Spritz is fairly new. You can off-ramp, pay bills (really nice feature), and load a Visa (SpritzCard).

Good job Sui. Making partnerships quickly and pushing into market. Top 5 here we come.

I heard about Spritz initially and pretty quickly looked past them, thinking they'd just be another MoonPay-like on ramp / off ramp. I was a fool for thinking that. The Spritz service is so cool and it's really painless to use. Suddenly a big fan of Spritz.

I wasn't managing my DEEP position closely. Had pretty much everything in a DEEP/BUE liquidity pool. Over a couple of days period, DEEP went on a tear while BLUE simultaneously lost about 30% of its value. 100% of my DEEP tokens got converted into BLUE. Since then, BLUE has remained relatively stable while DEEP added another ~35% to its price. Kicking myself over that one.

Yes, can't wait for more companies to follow their example with Bill Pay options. Even better when most of the financial places just start taking Bitcoin themselves.

It's only a matter of time before the entire global financial world revolves around crypto. Printed currency will be dead within 2 decades.

Maybe. Suppose it depends on more factors than I can count. Just seems like we're Bull run and market is going to find blockchains to reward with inflated pricing. Sui looks to be in a good position. I expect BTC to 2-3x from here, so why wouldn't Sui?

Sui?

I wish I was as confident and bullish as you are especially with BTC. I know it will certainly move to that point sooner than we think but one thing I am worried about is price manipulation by institutional traders in an attempt to keep it down once again as usual through various means but then again we gotta weigh in the other factors like the Ripple win and political atmosphere supercharging it.

I actually know SUI is a great investment and will continue to make waves but if the market keeps acting the way it is now it's certainly possible. I just don't know about BTC having a 2-3x increase over the next year though... I know it will certainly go up but 3x current market value would be insane...

Omniscient - January 21, 2025, 2:21 pm

Quote: I know it will certainly move to that point sooner than we think but one thing I am worried about is price manipulation by institutional traders in an attempt to keep it down once again as usual through various means

There is only one reason institutional traders push BTC price downwards. That's to BUY MORE, which is a bullish reason. You should worry about when they are trying to inflate the price so they can sell, that's bearish. In other words, the media lies to you for their own ends and don't trust them.

But that's the beauty of Bitcoin, controlled by none. So even if pricing goes up/down....Bitcoin ain't going anywhere and every single long-term chart shows Bitcoin doing multiples. Every single 5 year chart on Bitcoin show massive growth. So that means you just have to hold 5 years and even better if you can hold 10. When we get to 20 years, those are gonna be the wealthy people of this world.

:/ It can happen.

Just don't panic, because then you end up panic-selling , it goes back up, you then FOMO buy back in at a higher price, etc.

Not sure for your exact reasons, but for me I buy SUI because of a long-term prediction. So it could drop to $3, spike to $5, go to $7, I'll still buy.

At end of the day, if SUI supporters are right then nobody will care whether they bought it at $1, $2, $3, $4, or $5 in grand scheme of things.

Fingers crossed of course.

I did notice that crypto & stocks both re-gained a couple % in the last hour or two.

Hoping that it's corrected and on the way back up.

I know China's deepseek AI threw the markets into a fit this morning.

I wouldn't dismiss it so fast there's always a big pump follow up after an initial big run see pepe, shib etc but that takes weeks and months of consolidation meanwhile Sui already has motion. It's a tough spot to be in seeing other coins fly while being locked in an investment that underperforms. I think Sui does another 5x from here this year and that's judging based on other L1s price action historically when they were first introduced to the market during their first bullrun like Solana which ran to 70b and Avax to 30b.

Personally, I don't like wBTC and I'd never bridge regular BTC, but the current APR is really juicy. wBTC on Sui is minted and controlled by the Native Sui Bridge (<https://bridge.sui.io/>), not by the wBTC Network (<https://www.wbtc.network/>). You're still wrapping wBTC from Ethereum, however the wBTC Network has no control over wBTC or the issuance of wBTC on Sui.

With that being said, BlueFin and Suilend are offering nice returns on putting your BTC to work on Sui, but those aren't the platforms that really excite me yet. Numerous Bitcoin (Re-)Staking platforms, like Stax, SatLayer, and Babylon, are launching on Sui in the upcoming weeks/months. These will allow you to simply stake your Bitcoin for yield rather than having to deal with liquidity pools.

Rather than letting your Bitcoin sit around and do nothing, it's time to put your Bitcoin to work :). Once these protocols go live you'll see me move a significant amount of my Bitcoin into the Sui ecosystem.

I believe the SatLayer+Babylon Labs teams are doing some fancy Zero Knowledge magic, where your BTC gets locked up on the Bitcoin network, and you're given a correlated asset on Sui. As long as you maintain control of your assets on Sui, it should be trivial to wind the position back down and to automatically have your BTC returned to you.

Obviously we need to ensure the protocol is built soundly and without potential exploits, but it shouldn't rely any degree of trust.

This is the DeFi shit I want so badly. Secured wBTC earning me returns. I'd be happy to even get 5-8% APR as long as my existing BTC isn't in jeopardy. If I deposit 1 BTC, I don't want to get 1 wBTC to find out when I withdraw it's .84 BTC value. That's what was happening on Waves.

So that I can buy more for my bag. :)

Just today I was thinking about moving APT, RENDER and STX into SUI. Albeit they are lower marketcaps (the lower the mcap the higher the X), I have a strong conviction that SUI can climb into the top 6 (excluding stables) this year.

SUI-3183372 - March 2, 2025, 9:14 am

Yesterday I sold all of my stables and alts for SUI.

Yesterday I threw all of my SUI into Suilend.

Yesterday I borrowed the maximum amount of USDC that I could borrow against that SUI.

Yesterday I sold that borrowed USDC for more SUI.

Today is a good day.

We're all in that same boat. Had plenty of equity in December in both crypto and market stock. I just sold all my stocks to reinvest into different market positions and get rid of my margin. Crypto I'm moving more into USDT to ride this out for a bit. Still have my Sui but no guarantees. I think I'm still up slightly but I had great gains at $3.35, not so much at $2.35.

Even veterans are not immune to the lure of greed and the moon.

What's worse, is that the market can go much lower. We're still at an $82k BTC. No reason it can't go to $60k and test a bottom.

Braco22 - March 4, 2025, 8:11 am

A $60k isn't normally considered a correction since it's more than 45% from the top. We are either in a slow bleed to a potential $50k-60k bottom range, or it's one gigantic manipulation and the market will recover once we have our first rate cut and the start of the QE or really signing an EO and the U.S. starts buying the cryptos that are in the strategic crypto reserve.

On-Topic: I'm thinking of accepting a -60% loss on STX and moving the bag into SUI.

Also, Lombard Finance launched LBTC on Sui today, and returns on various DeFi protocols for engaging with LBTC are quite high. Swapped my WBTC for LBTC.

Well I think of it as a double-whammy.

You can argue that the seizures are a negative.

You can argue the fact they aren't buying the crypto from the market is a negative.

Either and both reasons are bearish. Not a lot of bull in the news other than the potential for long-term and that the government might (not assured) stop auctioning off millions in crypto assets seized. Whenever there is a big auction with hundreds of millions being poured into the market many people worry about a flood dilution. But personally I've done the math and it's really never more than a few percent of daily trade volume that's auctioned off so at best it can move the market 2-8% which the market does that all the time without these auctions.

If however the CR (Crypto Reserve) used actual Fed money or even Gold to buy from the market I think we'd see 10-20% gains today. Instead we saw drop last night and mostly flat today while people process the news.

I don't think that's a certainty. I hope you're right but markets are finicky and volatile. What's loved today is forgotten tomorrow.

Would love to hear what Sui has planned. I don't see Walrus being a big deal to the market. Might be great functionality but it's not something that will push value 2-3x.

So hard to say because overall bull market seems to be slowing down. If that happens, Sui and most of the market will go lower or maybe just stay flat. So hard to really predict what's going to be a success. But I do know that Sui has momentum, marketing, and the technology to be competitive.

Been hearing about a possible Pokémon collab?

SUI-3183372 - April 25, 2025, 12:25 pm

The official Sui Wallets have updated their look, feel, and branding.

All Sui Wallet offerings are now named Slush

Sui Chrome extension wallet has updated to become Slush Chrome extension wallet
Sui Wallet iOS and Android wallets are updating to become Slush
GetStashed web wallet is deprecated in favor of the new Slush web wallet interface.

Not a huge fan of the name but unification of wallet efforts is good to see.

Omniscient - April 25, 2025, 1:19 pm

I'm wondering who chose "Slush" as the brand for the wallet.

AI Quote: A slush fund is a secret or unofficial pool of money that's used for questionable*, unauthorized, or *unaccounted expenses.

It can mean different things depending on context:

- In corporate or government settings, it often refers to money set aside for bribes, shady deals, or "under-the-table" activities.
- In a more innocent use (like casual workplaces), it might just be a petty cash reserve for small expenses (like office parties or gifts) without going through formal accounting.

But usually, when people say slush fund, it carries a negative, potentially illegal connotation — like hiding where the money comes from and how it's spent.

Would you like a few historical examples too? Some of them are pretty wild.

As for the potential for Pokemon to be part of Sui, that would skyrocket the value to $20 really quickly imho.

thrudda - April 25, 2025, 5:27 pm

I just converted most of my Sui to USDC and Tether stablecoins. I'm up and swap around $3.20. I'm betting that Sui drops back to $2.80-$2.90 range at which point I'll jump right back in. That's the plan anyways. Fairly sure with my track record that Sui will have a 25% pop tomorrow to $4 though. But hey, no guts, no glory. Isn't this what makes alt-coin gambling so much fun?

btw, loving the new Slush wallet. Much better interface. Sui is absolutely doing the right thing on multiple levels. Which is why I'm taking the risks trying to get a bigger bag in the end. If Sui does go up, I'm likely out of the game and just folding my cards. No complaints, still did pretty decent and I'm definitely a fan now.

The recent hack on Cetus is something that will impact the price of $SUI when it's really not needed...

SUI-3183372 - May 22, 2025, 7:43 am

Cetus protocol hacked for ~$200m-$220m.

Roughly $60m was bridged off-chain. Through emergency validator coordination, the attacker's address was frozen from being able to move more of the stolen funds. $140m to $160m is recoverable on the Sui Network. A chunk of the funds that have been bridged to other chains have also been frozen.

Probably looking at a $50m hit to the ecosystem.

John Constantine - May 22, 2025, 7:48 am

This is mostly pertaining to tokens where all or most of their liquidity was stored on Cetus, so primarily just memecoins and Cetus' native token.

Assets like SUI, WAL, DEEP, NS, and other prominent protocol tokens, have only experience hits ranging from about 5-15%.

John Constantine - May 22, 2025, 11:13 am

Really makes you think about the safety of your assets on platforms like Suilend, Scallop etc.

They will probably invest more in their security and auditing now that this has happened, but you still think about it. Cetus was the biggest player on SUI.

This is why I worry about all this lending and bridges. Most of these serious hacks and losses are bridges. And actually not regretting my SUI sale a couple weeks ago. It might actually drop down under my sell point in the coming weeks. Not trying to bear Sui for others but from the sidelines I want back in and someone has to get hurt on the field first.

I'd generally agree with you, we've seen bridge exploits destabilize ecosystems time and time again, but in this case, the only role bridges played was moving funds to ethereum where it'd be more difficult to claw them back, no bridges were exploited or hacked.

In this scenario, one of the larger defi protocols on Sui had a bug in their platform, essentially enabling an attacker to:

- Initiate a flashloan
- Skew pool balance deliberately
- Add a spoof token with minimal liquidity
- Extract an outsized return, in this case, nearly double
- Repeat the process at higher volume
- Very little upfront capital was needed to execute the attack

The transactions are interesting to look at, here they are draining the ETH-USDC pool:

Braco22 - May 28, 2025, 1:51 am

SUI foundation will give them loan in form of SUI tokens most likely so they can inject it back into the LPs. And the voting will pass for the other 162mil. Overall it's bullish to see a hack of this magnitude gets solved in a timely manner.

John Constantine - May 28, 2025, 3:48 am

Personally I also believe it is a very bullish signal. The Sui Foundation quickly responded and came with a solution that is acceptable to the community and will require a vote before it gets passed. I'm 99.9% sure the vote will be passed as most, if not the whole Sui community is behind the loan proposal. Huge props to them for collaborating with everyone in the environment and for the transparency towards Sui holders and investors. Obviously they provide the loan to Cetus to save face but it is nice to know that Cetus will remain in the ecosystem and this only shows that the Sui Foundation is capable of handling events like this, which is not the case for many other blockchains out there.

SUI-3183372 - May 28, 2025, 1:07 pm

There are two components at play.

1. The stolen and frozen funds on the Sui block chain totaling around $160m
2. The stolen and liquid funds on the Ethereum block chain totaling around $62m

The ongoing vote is concerning the $160m. Cetus is proposing an upgrade to Sui that would effectively make them the owners of the stolen funds. This vote will pass in less than 24 hours. That's ~75% of the funds returned

The 'foundation bail out' is a loan being extended to Cetus by the Sui Foundation to help them cover the outstanding $62m in losses. The Sui Foundation is not offering a $62m loan, it will be much smaller. Cetus is able to cover the bulk themselves, and other parties are also extending loans. I've been busy at Bitcoin 2025 this week and haven't had a lot of chance to keep up, but that's my current understanding.

PS: The most difficult thing I've ever done is attempt to convince a bunch of BTC maxis to put their BTC to work on Sui one week after a major protocol hack. Worst timing ever, I'd have been better off staying home this week.

Omniscient - May 30, 2025, 6:14 pm

I think that's close to my avg too. I started with a big buy at $3.15. I asked Grok to calculate my wallet DCA and it's about $2.90. Suppose that's not terrible but now I'm out of spare investment to bring my DCA down. My bag is not small and if Sui doesn't recover I'm gonna take a hit. See, that's the problem with alts. It's a gamble. Long term holding this maybe it goes to under a $1 or more before I decide to get out and then I lose big. It might hit $3.50 and I'll bail just to sleep at night and take profit. Then it could moon to $5+ and I'll be pissed.

None of that stuff happens with my Bitcoin investment. I sleep really well at night, I don't panic if it drops. I'm positive that Bitcoin will remain King and always be top of the market. Alts might be fun and high reward but they are so much more risky for one simple reason, there are dozens even hundreds of competing alts. While there is just one Bitcoin.

Yeah, but the gains $SUI will print after the first rate 3rd quarter will be massive. QT is slowly nearing an end, and this Iran-Israel bullsh1t will be solved by the end of the month. I really see $SUI hitting at least $10 BEFORE the EOY.

Little off-topic:

Iran has moved most of the enriched uranium a day or two before the attack, which Trump has openly posted online and gave them time on purpose. Iran will attack an empty base of the US in Qatar (which has been evacuated 5-6 days ago), just to save face in front of the cult and their people that they're not "pussies". China, India and Pakistan and the other Arab countries will not allow the Strait of Hormuz to be closed for more than a few days, so that falls down the water as well. The market is pricing a very, very short-lived "war" hence why US OIL is just $73 and not $100 already.

We'll see probably a flash crash to $97k today and it'll have a V-shaped recovery and then little sideways movement.

Keep in mind that we've had A LOT of institutional buys while this noise is active, TEXAS also signed the SBR into law... We're waiting for potentially (90% approval) an approval to a $SOL ETF which will bring a very large portion of "trust" for the entire alt market, we're also waiting for a staked $ETH ETF being probably approved.

My 2-cents are that we're either going to see a small rally during July and POSSIBLY get a sideways movement or a little bit correction in August-September and the final push will be in Q4 where everyone must take chips off the table.

Is there even any Euro stablecoins at all? Never seen one...

Tether does have one...

AI Quote: Yes, there are several crypto stablecoins pegged to the euro. These are commonly used in European crypto markets and on major exchanges. Here are the most widely recognized ones:

- 1. EURt (Tether Euro)
Symbol: EURT
Issuer: Tether Blockchain: Ethereum (ERC-20), TRON (TRC-20)
Notes: Operated by the same company as USDT. Available on many exchanges (e.g., Bitfinex, Bitstamp).
- 2. Euro Coin (EUROC)
Symbol: EUROC
Issuer: Circle (the same company behind USDC) Blockchain: Ethereum, Avalanche, Solana, Base
Notes: Gaining traction, especially for DeFi and institutional use. Available on Coinbase, Uniswap, and others.
- 3. Stasis Euro (EURS)
Symbol: EURS
Issuer: Stasis Blockchain: Ethereum (ERC-20), Algorand, Polygon
Notes: Popular in Europe; asset-backed and regularly audited.
- 4. agEUR (Angle Protocol)
Symbol: agEUR
Issuer: Angle Protocol (DeFi) Blockchain: Ethereum, Polygon, Optimism, others
Notes: Decentralized, widely used in DeFi, backed by collateral.
- 5. sEUR (Synth Euro from Synthetix)
Symbol: sEUR
Issuer: Synthetix Blockchain: Ethereum
Notes: Synthetic asset, not fiat-backed; more for DeFi speculation/trading.

Summary Table

Name	Symbol	Type	Major Blockchains	Centralized/Decentralized
-----	-----	-----	-----	-----
Tether Euro	EURT	Fiat-backed	Ethereum, TRON	Centralized
Euro Coin	EUROC	Fiat-backed	Ethereum, Avalanche, etc.	Centralized
Stasis Euro	EURS	Fiat-backed	Ethereum, Algorand, Polygon	Centralized
agEUR	agEUR	Collateral	Ethereum, Polygon, etc.	Decentralized
sEUR	sEUR	Synthetic	Ethereum	Decentralized

These are the most common and liquid euro stablecoins.
The most widely available and trusted are EURT, EUROC, and EURS.
agEUR is popular in DeFi for trading and liquidity pools.
* sEUR is used mainly within Synthetix and related DeFi platforms.

Let me know if you want more details on how to buy, use, or store any of them!

I think it's too late. I use Sui for the network but the whole alt market is stagnant, it's not just Sui. Sui can surge again if the whole market does, or in the next year it can dwindle with the market under $2. The ATH of Sui could potentially have come and gone. Even though it's a fantastic network

What would matter is important news and partnerships to push a bull cycle. On that note I'm not really following the project closely enough to know if anything exciting is coming.

yeah outside of sui chain there is tether eur, and eurc! sadly is a bit more difficult to get eurc than usdc on sui chain. I asked because of the dollar dumping, may be a good investment for me and a quick swap on this chain is simply great.

Sui is generally a top performer when we swing in either direction. A day of heavy gains, you'll see Sui being one of the top gainers. A day of heavy losses, you'll see Sui being one of the biggest losers. Not sure what makes it swing harder in either direction but it's been a bit of a trend for a while now.

This is the important info off that page...

1. Tech: Blockchain design and programming language

Blockchain design: Sui's technical architecture is purpose-built for global scalability, positioning it especially well for high frequency, low latency use cases like payments and gaming.

Predictable, low transaction fees: Low cost and smooth, predictable fees help reduce friction and optimize user experience.

Object-based approach and parallel processing: Unlike Ethereum, Solana, and other account-based blockchains that update a global smart contract ledger, Sui uses an object-based model. In this model, each asset is a distinct object linked to a wallet, allowing transactions to be processed in parallel. By updating only the relevant objects instead of a shared global state, this model reduces computation, improves efficiency, and allows for greater network scalability.

"Fast path" execution: Sui distinguishes between simple asset transfers and complex smart contract calls.[3] Peer-to-peer simple asset transfers are routed through a "fast path" allowing near-instant finality.[4] This positions Sui well for payments use cases.

Horizontal scaling: Unlike most blockchains, Sui's network capacity grows with computation power. Sui validators can add servers to increase performance under demand constraints. As a result, according to the team, an 8x increase in hardware translates to an 8x increase in throughput with no increase in latency.[5]

Basically a better technology Smart Chain is actually going up in value.

I just don't know how much of that $450mil will be bought off the hands of the foundation, in terms of locked tokens or team tokens.

As of today the price is $3.95 (avg) that's $$450\text{mil}/3.95 = 113$ mil $SUI tokens. Next unlock is set for 2nd of Aug with 44 mil $SUI tokens so I suppose some of that will be bought OTC. Even if half of that is used in direct market buys, it can impact the price around 3-5% maximum.

Yeah, the sentiment is shared broadly. The Cetus hack back in May killed off a lot of the momentum that Sui was riding. Will be important to rebuild that momentum, however the roadmap for the remainder of the year doesn't hold a lot of excitement. Hoping some new killer apps or partnerships emerge by Nov/Dec of this year.

Braco22 - September 19, 2025, 7:20 am

The transactions are super fast and cheap, and lending/borrowing is virtually instant and so cheap. Unfortunately, a lot of other chains (maybe not with that much of TXs per day) can achieve that and currently do. It all comes down to the marketing of one project. Even if you move mountains, but there's no one to see it... No one will appreciate even the 1cm that you moved.

However, the entire market sentiment is a little bit down. We got the long awaited rate cut, but that didn't really do anything YET.

Ika is a project that recently launched on Sui, and the idea is actually pretty interesting. You know how most cross-chain stuff right now relies on bridges and wrapped tokens, which always come with risks? Ika is trying to change that by using multi-party computation, basically advanced cryptography, to let Sui smart contracts directly control assets on other blockchains like Bitcoin or Ethereum. They call these things dWallets(decentralized wallets) and the cool part is that developers can plug them straight into their apps. So instead of needing a bridge to move tokens around, the contract itself can just manage them natively on the other chain. The IKA token is what powers the system, covering things like signing fees, staking, and governance. In short, it's aiming to make cross-chain transactions safer, faster, and way less messy than what we're used to with bridges.

Ethena / USDe Partnership

Today, Sui and Nasdaq-listed Sui treasury company, SUI Group Holdings Limited (NASDAQ: SUIG, or "SUI Group"), announced the upcoming launch of suiUSDe, a proprietary Sui-native synthetic dollar token powered by Ethena, the creator of USDe, one of the fastest-growing digital dollars with a market cap of over $14 billion. The launch of suiUSDe will mark an industry-first collaboration between a digital asset treasury company, a foundation, and a stablecoin provider.

SuiUSDe will be backed by a mix of digital assets and corresponding short futures positions. In addition to suiUSDe, USDi, a new stablecoin backed by the BlackRock USD Institutional Digital Liquidity Fund (BUIDL) tokenized money market fund, will also launch on Sui later this year.

The reserves backing suiUSDe produce revenue, which the Sui Foundation and SUIG will both use to acquire and aggregate additional SUI tokens through purchases made on the open market.

LayerZero Integration

LayerZero, a leading interoperability protocol connecting more than 140 blockchains and enabling over $120 billion in transfer volume, has partnered with Sui to enable connectivity at scale for Sui-based assets.

“We’re continuing to remove the barriers that prevent global coordination by eliminating the friction users and builders face when navigating today’s fragmented landscape,” said Christian Thompson, Managing Director of Sui Foundation. “Sui’s integration with LayerZero is another step in that direction. With LayerZero, Sui becomes a first-class participant in the multi-chain economy, opening the door for applications and assets to move with the speed and simplicity the Sui ecosystem is known for.”

sheesh 17% is a nice one. I will be taking a look... almost immediately lol.

There's some nice activity with SUI this week for sure.
I still think it can hit $5 very easily, and looks like there's a solid chance of that happening this month with all the news & traction.

Omniscient - October 9, 2025, 11:37 am
A 10x for Sui from here puts it near SOL value. I just don't see anything preventing that possible scenario. Sui seems poised for a run up the market cap chain. It will take some good marketing, spreading the word, and such. But the value imho is there.

If centralized garbage like BNB can be worth $172B, I don't see why a better, faster, just as cheap, and fully decentralized blockchain can't also go over that $100B mark.

AI Quote: Here's a technical / architectural comparison of BNB (BNB Chain / BNB Smart Chain ecosystem) vs Sui (SUI / Sui Network) in terms of features, strengths, design trade-offs, and use cases. (I'll mostly ignore price / token market behavior per your request.)

Stock market information for BNB (BNB)
BNB is a crypto in the CRYPTO market.
The price is 1244.88 USD currently with a change of -72.01 USD (-0.05%) from the previous close.
The intraday high is 1324.13 USD and the intraday low is 1227.09 USD.

Stock market information for Sui (SUI)

Sui is a crypto in the CRYPTO market. The price is 3.39 USD currently with a change of -0.15 USD (-0.04%) from the previous close.
The intraday high is 3.54 USD and the intraday low is 3.35 USD.
Overview & Philosophy

Aspect	BNB / BNB Chain	Sui / Sui Network

Type	A blockchain ecosystem centered on BNB token, combining a “beacon / governance” chain and a smart contract / EVM-compatible chain. ([The Block][1])
	A new Layer-1 blockchain built from (largely) scratch with novel architecture, emphasizing scalability, usability, and low latency. ([Sui][2])
Design Goals / Focus	Leverage existing EVM / Ethereum tooling and network effect; provide scalable, low-fee environment for DeFi, NFTs, dApps; grow the Web3 ecosystem under a unified branding. ([Binance Academy][3]) Solve scalability and UX bottlenecks in existing chains; enable parallel processing of transactions; lower onboarding friction (e.g. “wallets with web credentials”) ([Sui][4])

Technical & Architectural Features

Here are some of the salient features and tradeoffs for each.

BNB / BNB Chain

Strengths / Features:

1. EVM compatibility / developer familiarity

BNB Smart Chain (which is part of the broader BNB Chain) is fully EVM compatible. This means Ethereum smart contracts, tooling (e.g. Truffle, Hardhat, MetaMask) and many existing dApps can be ported with minimal friction. ([BNB Chain][5])

2. Dual-chain / modular structure

The BNB Chain ecosystem is composed of multiple chains (Beacon / governance, Smart Chain, and planned scaling chains like opBNB or zkBNB) to separate concerns (governance, staking, smart contracts) and scale. ([The Block][1])

3. Mature tooling and ecosystem

Because it's been around longer (in its BSC / BNB Chain form), there's a relatively rich ecosystem of wallets, infrastructure, bridges, DeFi protocols, explorers, etc. ([BNB Chain][6])

4. Burn mechanism & tokenomics elements

BNB has built-in mechanisms to burn supply over time (so-called "BNB burns") to reduce supply, which is a feature baked into the tokenomics. ([Forbes][7])

5. Plans for privacy and UX improvements

The roadmap for BNB Chain includes adding native privacy features (for token transfers, smart contract calls), compliance-friendly confidentiality, better authentication / UX (multi-sig, key rotation, smoother login). ([BNB Chain][8])

Tradeoffs / Weaknesses / Constraints:

Because it's EVM compatible, many of the architectural constraints and bottlenecks from the Ethereum paradigm carry over (e.g. the need for global state, congestion, serial execution of dependent transactions).

Scalability improvements often rely on layer-2 or rollups (opBNB, zkBNB) rather than radical rethinking of transaction processing. ([The Block][1]) Potential centralization risk: as with many "faster / scalable" chains, the selection of validators and governance structure may tilt toward a smaller set, especially given Binance's influence. (Critics have raised this in BSC / BNB Chain discussions.) ([Wikipedia][9])

Privacy is not fully built in yet — it's on the roadmap. ([BNB Chain][8])

Sui / Sui Network

Strengths / Features:

1. Parallel Transaction Processing / Object Model

One of Sui's hallmark innovations is its "object-centric" data model and ability to process many transactions in parallel (when they don't conflict) rather than strictly serial execution. This allows for more throughput and lower latency in many real-world cases. ([Cointelegraph][10])

For example, if two transactions operate on disjoint objects (i.e. no overlapping state), they can be processed in parallel safely. ([Cointelegraph][10])

This sidesteps some of the "serial bottleneck" that plagues many blockchains.

2. Fast / Low-Latency Finality

Sui aims for sub-second finality in many cases. Its architecture (e.g. consensus + efficient ordering) is designed to make transactions “settled” very fast. ([Kraken][11])

In academic work, they present “Sui Lutris,” a hybrid consensus / ordering scheme that can achieve <0.5 s latencies for many types of transactions under high throughput. ([arXiv][12])

3. Usability / Lower Barrier to Entry

zkLogin / Web Credential Logins: Users may be able to create wallets using existing web credentials (Google, etc.) via zero-knowledge authentication, reducing friction. ([Sui][4])

Sponsored Transactions / Gas abstraction: dApps can sponsor gas fees so users don’t need to hold SUI to interact initially (or to mask gas complexity). ([arXiv][13])

Storage Refund / Rebate / “Storage Fund”: some of the fees are recycled (or refunded) to manage long-term costs. ([Sui][4])

Package Upgrades / Dynamic Contracts: Sui supports upgrading smart contract packages, giving developers more flexibility post deployment. ([Hacken][14])

4. Novel Consensus / Ordering Architecture

Sui decouples consensus and ordering/commit paths for certain “non-conflicting” transactions, using consensusless paths when possible and invoking full consensus only when needed. This hybrid approach helps keep latency low for simple transactions. ([arXiv][12])

The chain uses the Narwhal & Bullshark pipeline (a DAG-based broadcast + consensus protocol) for data availability and ordering. ([Kraken][11])

Tradeoffs / Challenges / Risks:

Because it’s a newer architecture, the tooling, infrastructure, and developer ecosystem is less mature (though it is growing). The “object model + parallel execution” is powerful but also more complex; it adds complexity in designing contracts and reasoning about state dependencies.

In “hot” contention scenarios (many transactions touching the same objects), you still need ordering / conflict resolution, so parallelism gains may diminish. Newer, less battle-tested — there may be undiscovered edge-case bugs or security risks.

It’s less directly compatible with Ethereum tooling / smart contracts, so porting existing EVM dApps is nontrivial. The success of usability features (e.g. zkLogin, gas sponsoring) depends on adoption and proper security models.

Feature-by-Feature Comparison & Use Cases

Here’s a more direct side-by-side with emphasis on what one might be better at or more appropriate for, given a use case.

Feature / Use Case	BNB / BNB Chain
Sui / Sui Network		Comments
-----	-----

Smart contract support / dApps	Good support via EVM; many DeFi / NFT dApps already exist
Native smart contracts via Move / Sui’s object model	BNB is easier for existing EVM projects to migrate; Sui offers potentially more performance for new dApps
Throughput / latency	High throughput (with rollups, scaling chains) but limited by EVM

sequential constraints High potential throughput via parallelism, lower latency for many transactions For use cases with disjoint state, Sui can outperform; under contention, advantage decreases
Finality & transaction speed	Finality depends; block times are relatively fast in BSC / BNB Chain
Sub-second finality for many transactions via hybrid architecture	Sui is optimized for low latency / fast UX
Developer experience / ecosystem	Rich, mature, many tools, bridges, libraries
Growing, but newer; Move language (a bit less ubiquitous)	The tradeoff is maturity vs innovation
User onboarding / UX	Standard blockchain UX (wallets, gas, etc.)
Abstraction of gas (sponsored tx), zkLogin, smoother onboarding	Sui aims to reduce friction, which could help mass adoption
Conflict & concurrency	All transactions must contend in global sequence; conflicts are serialized
Non-conflicting transactions run parallel; conflicts resolved via ordering	Sui's model gives an advantage when operations are independent
Upgradeability / flexibility	Standard smart contract pattern upgrades (proxies, etc.)
Support for package upgrades, dynamic contracts	Sui gives more built-in flexibility for evolving logic
Tokenomics & governance	BNB has burn mechanisms, staking, governance roles
SUI used for gas, staking, governance, plus possibly rebates / storage fund	Both have typical crypto incentives, but BNB's token burns are more established
Privacy / confidentiality	Privacy features are in roadmap (not present yet) ([BNB Chain][8])
Doesn't emphasize privacy as core feature currently (not its main focus)	BNB may get more privacy features in future
Security & maturity	More battle-tested; infrastructure has seen many attacks/defenses
Newer — fewer historical exploits, but less proven at scale	BNB has "proof by fire"; Sui must grow trust over time

Summary & Recommendations (Without Considering Price)

If your priority is compatibility, ecosystem, tooling, and immediate viability for existing dApps, BNB / BNB Chain is a safer, lower friction choice. Its EVM compatibility and mature infrastructure are strong advantages. If your priority is pushing performance — high throughput, low latency, better UX for end users — and you're building new from scratch, Sui offers more architectural innovation. The parallel execution model, usability optimizations (gas abstraction, zkLogin), and fresh design give it potential to outperform in many contexts.

For use cases like gaming, high-frequency micro-transactions, or interfaces where UX matters a lot, Sui might have an edge (if everything works as intended).

* For use cases like porting existing Ethereum DeFi apps, leveraging existing liquidity, cross-chain bridges, or where developer tooling matters more than ultimate performance, BNB is more pragmatic.

If you like, I can run a "benchmarks / performance comparison" (if public) or simulate pros/cons for your specific project case (e.g. gaming, DeFi, etc.). Do you want me to do that?

I'm considering throwing another $500-1000 into Sui

I wouldn't be looking at selling anywhere under $10 long-term, and would not sell anywhere under $5 in short-term

I do believe in the project long-term and it hits a lot of my criteria

The talent behind the project, current team, etc is nice.

The work with Move & general advancements for the market/industry are great too.

Lots of nice things

Anyone have any major flaws I might be overlooking? I'm hesitant because I can't think of too many, which is always a red flag for me because I need to prove that my lack of red flags isn't due to a lack of knowledge.

Whenever I leave funds, it goes to 1% of buy value.

Example is I spent $400 on Aleph Zero months ago. It's $22 today. I had $75k worth of Divi years ago, sold it all for $1500. Just let it sit is a bad option for me. Taking my loss now.

Sui does stand a good chance to gain utility and maybe even value in the market but who is to say if won't drop under $1 again. I'd rather stablecoin and wait for a new entry point. The market looks like a serious downturn is coming. I'm nearly always wrong about which way the wind blows.

Debank doesn't support Sui afaik.

Profits are in the $600k ballpark, give or take $100k (This is just for Sui ecosystem holdings + BTC (I don't hold much else)).

I haven't calculated my average buy price for SUI in a long time, but it used to be around $0.27.

SUI is getting absolutely hammered. 65%.

Could've came up huge and sold prior to 5 but I chickened out at 3. Just glad I didn't decide to gamble on this one bc I only hold BTC long term like that. Cannot see it coming close to 2023 for awhile. With so much negative sentiment and technical weakness pressing the price down, does SUI have enough fundamental ecosystem strength to overcome these hurdles and rebound to its old all-time high before 2028 for those seasoned in TA?

Hackers - November 19, 2025, 7:11 pm

I'll be looking for a Sui buy again in the future, but I'll be looking for $1.00 to $1.10 for a retest of bottoms as an ideal price

Happy to buy some at these prices too, but will hold off. I have other lump sums & DCAs I'm focused on right now

Definitely would like to own at least 1000 Sui in early 2026 though. I do think it's a solid project & buy

I don't lump Sui in w/ other alt coins, at least not in the same way. It's an alt, but it's a sexy fucking alt.

So it's pretty much like Zcash.

ALL transactions should be private. It shouldn't be an option at all. That's why Zcash will never be better than XMR.

Being delisted from exchanges will be better for Sui in the long term too if they go this route.

Omniscient - December 31, 2025, 2:58 pm

This could be huge for Sui.

Because honestly the Sui Explorer has a lot of exposed information. I look at my own wallets activity and basically they label all the exchanges and financial sites you interact with.

Having some additional privacy options that are similar to ZEC may work. I'm still experimenting with Zcash shielded addresses.

Yes, seeing the pop but it's still down pretty big from ATH. Which I guess could mean it's got room to recover a nice percentage if it can get back on track for market attention. That's all this basically is. Which crypto is the darling of the moment? It's tiresome actually. Don't have to care with Bitcoin, it's king.

is it me or the slush app got an update where my address is less visible? I needed my SUI address and went crazy for 5 min trying to find a "receive" button!

On manage accounts I can actually copy it, but I don't know if the receive button was the same as the "request" now that seems to be only for payments inside slush. Been using sui alot and never thought about it.

I would find it better to stick to network as most as possible, but I guess this is fair to attract mainstream. Will also try okx and suiet, just for curiosity.

Also omni said on this thread about a desktop app for a wallet, I think there are not yet because docs are oriented to build on typescript with react stuff. I think modern typescript is a win, but a react native wallet will be cool to have.

I get the vibe Sui is doing things in Finance that Ripple Labs wishes it could do.

Market is hurting now but it's great to see Sui trotting along as if it doesn't care. That's a good thing. They seem to be very focused on features and not market pricing. That's a sign of strong tech over some shitcoin trying to pocket money (like Radix did).

But Sui is sub $1 now and I don't know when the market turns. I just hope I get a bag at an appropriate price and this continues. I'll still on the sidelines but I wouldn't mind a $2000 Sui bag at 75 cents or lower.

Based on what?

Their momentum lately has been astounding and I'm only seeing positives.

The macro will obviously dictate the direction Sui heads this year, as it will with 99% of alts, but if conditions improve, Sui's primed for explosive growth again. Their perps volume is steadily growing, Aftermath just launched the most impressive fully on chain perps dex pretty much in existence, they just need more pairs and to start drawing in volume. DeepBook has had some major upgrades with more to come (prediction liquidity layer being one).

Nothing to do with SUI's use cases and momentum, just a gut feeling it will be a red year for BTC and crypto as a whole, as above so below.

Undoubtedly I believe it will see some great gains in the future, just not right now.

SUI-3183372 - March 31, 2026, 12:48 pm

I'm still slowly accumulating. Looking cycle to cycle, roughly 20% of top 100 coins perform well and retest ATH's in their next cycle, 80% will fade into obscurity. What sets the 20% apart is continued development during bear market conditions (from both the core team and ecosystem builders), and the tech built still being relevant / performant. Sui still exhibits all of these traits, and could be well positioned to be a part of that 20% as we [hopefully] enter another new cycle.

If all goes well, I can retire before I'm 40.

If it doesn't, I've already cashed out enough more than I ever expected I'd make in crypto, I won't beat myself up over it.

Gasless stablecoin transactions land on Sui in a matter of days.

Want to send $100, $1000, or even $1000000 to your relatives across the globe? You can spend $50 on a bank transfer or Western Union and have to wait hours to days, or you can use Sui and it is free and instant.

Want to adjust stablecoin based defi positions? Completely free. Market makers or high volume traders who may be accumulating thousands of transactions are paying tens to hundreds to thousands of dollars paying for these position adjustments. Free on Sui.

Sui just became the de facto landscape for agentic payments. AI agents aren't going to be using inferior tech, they will gravitate towards the cheapest and fastest venues. There will be no chain cheaper than Sui for agentic payments and agentic finance.

Gasless stablecoin transactions like this are something that only really works on a highly scalable chain, as the fee must be very low for this to work. Very few chains can pull this off. Others are trying to replicate our work here by sponsoring transactions, but that's just a third party subsidizing you, eventually the funds dedicated to these campaigns will dry up and you'll go back to paying gas.

Not on Sui.

It's really hard to say. Plenty of well suited venues never see the traction/volume/activity that they deserve. Sui will be very strongly positioned for agentic finance, but we still need the builders to come in and build on top of this infrastructure to make it a reality.

We have an early example here (quality is better if you watch on X):

There are prices that you can't come back from. The range you're targeting would signal Sui's death, not a good buying opportunity. Sub $0.40 becomes very dangerous for Sui.

We've been down in the 0.4's and very briefly the high 0.3's before, but I wouldn't consider prices from its initial launch year, there's a lot of volatility, unlocks, lack of discovery, and other moving pieces there.

Since May 2024, Sui has only really spent a short period of time (outside of our current reality) under $1, and we dipped as low as $0.60. I recall a lot of people close to the project fearing $0.40, stating it could introduce a death spiral that is difficult to pull out from.

But still, 2h from stall, I can't do a transaction or withdrawing from a vault, that really is bad news from a chain with all these usecases :(

Agreed.

People think that a lower price crypto is a buy opportunity. In nearly all cases it's a signal that the hype is over. Especially with these Smart Contract chains.

Unless Sui pulls off a masterful partnership or miraculous chain upgrade feature, I think it's going to languish with the rest of the market. Sad really.

I don't think Sui is about to experience a heavy drop but same thing about experience a pop upwards.

Feel the same. 5h of no transactions is crazy. It's not about the price, It's about being critical, and completely freezing a chain for hours doesn't feel good for a chain that aims to be that big.

SUI-3183372 - May 28, 2026, 1:27 pm

Should be back online any minute. We're seeing >65% of validators on the new update now.

Back online. Explorers are updating so there may be lag in seeing transactions landing there, but chain is fully usable again. May have some performance degradation while the remainder of the validators come back online.

You are letting your emotions get too involved over an altcoin. This is hysterical.

I'm not saying SUI can't go back up; it eventually will, but the momentum to the downside is still substantial, and the market will not do a 360 turn as fast as you want it to.

I think he was poking fun at you saying the market won't "do a 360 as fast as you think" which would basically just mean the market isn't going to stay exactly the same the way you think. Its like the meme of saying doing a 360 and walking away from 2009 or whatever u know, it just sounds kinda silly and doesn't actually make sense if you put it under a microscope even if people can infer what you really mean.

Of course, no one would ever know when the bottom will be. To answer your question, the people who understand technicals would wait for signs that the market is ready to go up. I understand the method of DCA, nothing wrong with that, the why has to be strong.

I also want to note that just as crypto goes up, people become excited and chase the price at a premium. For example, when BTC was over 100k, a massive number of people were not only buying at those levels but also speculating that BTC would hit 300k-500k from 100k.

Confidential transfers are live in public beta on Sui Devnet.

Transfer amounts and balances are private, with controlled visibility for compliance and auditability.

What this means for finance workflows: Imagine every time you send money, the amount is written on the outside of the envelope — visible to anyone passing by. That's how most blockchains work today. Every transaction is fully public. Confidential transfers change that.

The amount inside the envelope is sealed. People can still see who sent it and who received it, but not how much. Importantly, the issuer decides who can open the envelope, so an issuer, exchange, or regulator can still access important info when needed.

With confidential transfers on Sui:

- > Sender and receiver addresses and token type stay visible when a transaction occurs.
- > Transfer amounts and balances become confidential.
- > Authorized parties maintain access through defined policies to enable compliance.

-> Audit trails remain intact.

This removes a structural barrier. Institutions, fintechs, and payment apps that need controlled visibility now have a path forward. They get the benefits of a public chain, without exposing their flows. Public and private transfers both live alongside each other.

Visible where it should be. Confidential where it needs to be. Auditable when required.

Launch partners Bridge, TRM Labs and Merkle Science are already working with the core team to explore confidential transfers, and how risk scoring, monitoring, and investigations would function when sensitive financial data isn't fully public onchain.

That's an important step. I certainly consider it a risk that address balances can be seen online.

Imagine on your bank debit card it exposed your account balance every time you used it? Nobody would want that.

Nice move by Sui. Glad to see improvements towards security. It might attract some additional usage. The zero fee Stablecoin transfers are certainly nice. I really think Sui could overtake Tron for stablecoins.

Even the Tronlink "gas free" wallet raised their fee from $1 to $1.50 but that adds up. Having an actual zero fee is a huge plus.

True, crypto will do what it wants. Not sweating it too much though. Whether it holds the 60k floor or drops to 50k, I'm just sticking to the DCA plan and buying the dips.

A little bit of relief for SUI in the past week. Up 9.07%. Hoping to continue to see some green candles for this month.

Here are my current holdings.

SUI-3183372 - July 5, 2026, 9:45 am

Yesterday Sui demonstrated a peak of 6.08m TPS on mainnet.

Sui also demonstrated a sustained ~1.3m TPS for a period of roughly 18 hours.

This was a stress test designed to show that even under intense load, Sui stays consistently moving, blocktimes don't increase, they remain sub-second, and that fees stay predictable and low. There were no spikes in fees, there was no increase in failed transactions, there were no slow downs or other inconveniences.

Even cooler, these transactions weren't nothingburger empty transactions. This was a wide variety of game related transactions, swaps and financial transactions, transactions related to messaging, transactions related to data storage, transactions related to payments. This was meant to mimic real world usage under a massive load.

Sui remained fully functional while breaking records.

(Jun 8, 2026 10:06 AM)SUI-3183372 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Confidential transfers are live in public beta on Sui Devnet.

Transfer amounts and balances are private, with controlled visibility for compliance and auditability.

What this means for finance workflows: Imagine every time you send money, the amount is written on the outside of the envelope — visible to anyone passing by. That's how most blockchains work today. Every transaction is fully public. Confidential transfers change that.

The amount inside the envelope is sealed. People can still see who sent it and who received it, but not how much. Importantly, the issuer decides who can open the envelope, so an issuer, exchange, or regulator can still access important info when needed.

With confidential transfers on Sui:

- > Sender and receiver addresses and token type stay visible when a transaction occurs.
- > Transfer amounts and balances become confidential.
- > Authorized parties maintain access through defined policies to enable compliance.
- > Audit trails remain intact.

This removes a structural barrier. Institutions, fintechs, and payment apps that need controlled visibility now have a path forward. They get the benefits of a public chain, without exposing their flows. Public and private transfers both live alongside each other.

Visible where it should be. Confidential where it needs to be. Auditable when required.

Launch partners Bridge, TRM Labs and Merkle Science are already working with the core team to explore confidential transfers, and how risk scoring, monitoring, and investigations would function when sensitive financial data isn't fully public onchain.

Read more -> <https://blog.sui.io/confidential-transfers-public-beta/>

The envelope analogy undersells the hard part the interesting engineering isn't hiding the amount, it's proving the hidden amount is valid. Encrypted balances with range proofs so you can't mint value out of thin air, while an auditor key can still decrypt when policy requires it.

The open question for me is the auditor key itself. Issuer controlled visibility is a single point of failure: compromise that key and every "confidential" flow on the token is retroactively public. Curious whether the beta supports threshold/multi-party auditor keys or key rotation, and how TRM and Merkle Science plan to do risk scoring when the amounts they'd normally score on are ciphertext.

Never the less it has my attention

Key rotation is supported in the beta, so a compromised or retired auditor key can be swapped out. Threshold or MPC-managed auditor keys are not yet supported, but that's the direction they'll be heading later. They wanted to get this off the ground, and there's a lot of operational complexity around key management and authorized investigations, so the current design starts with the simpler single-key model to get compliant confidentiality working first.

On the risk-scoring side, providers like TRM and Merkle Science would get delegated auditor access from the asset issuer and decrypt only inside their own secure indexing and analytics infrastructure. Same as they do today, they rely on their existing controls (SOC 2 Type II, ISO 27001, GDPR) to protect that data, including from insiders. By default the amounts and volumes only surface to their customers for high or severe risk entities, or during a legitimate investigation, following the issuer's policy.

Taserz - July 8, 2026, 8:20 pm tbh though SOC 2 type 2 is a joke. All the controls are protections but not perfect. But I am happy they are taking the right steps. Honestly I never come on this forum anymore just came here to take a peak at what is going on and I might frequent this section more. Been in the industry since it first started.

Still having my SUI, but there are some things that makes me doubt about the future of it.

- CTO & Co-Founder Sam Blackshear left Mysten Labs to join Anthropic. Very talented guy.
- All earn dApps got its APR reduced, apparently the high % was because Sui Foundation Incentives played an important role there.

Would love to have some good news about it. Any ETA on hashi? I liked the idea but still on testnet $65k Bitcoin is the price I'm watching. If we hold above it through October, I'm bullish. If we fall below it, it'll be a rough winter.

On the topic of Sui. Basecamp is ~33 days away. I'd expect news to slow a bit as they hold on to major announcements to share at Basecamp. October 7-8 will reveal Sui's roadmap going into 2027.

Sam was 50% of the reason I came to Sui, Kostas was the other 50%. While sad, I don't view the Sam news as terrible. Sam's major focus was Move, he's the inventor of the language and most of his focus was on Move its self. Move has matured and is in a very good space now, it doesn't need a lot of attention anymore, and over the last year, Sam has increasingly been advising on non-Move related workstreams, which he probably cares about far less than Move. With not a lot of work that he's passionate about left (Not that he's not passionate about Sui, just less so about non-Move related Sui work), it makes sense for him to move into a frontier landscape where he can be excited about what he's doing again. He's still forming a Move Foundation and will be maintaining and advancing Move, he'll still act as an advisor for Mysten Labs, he just gets to jump back into the trenches and get his hands dirty again at Anthropic. Sam helping pave the path between future Sui+Anthropic synergies isn't nothing either.

Incentives shifted and redistributed, they didn't get scaled back. Apps that weren't producing volume or growing their userbases were deprioritized for those that were. Growth is now a major requirement towards incentives. Those who lost them can re-earn them by showing progress. You'll continue to see shifts every 2 weeks while a good balance is found. You can still earn 10% APY on your stables on Current w/ a very very low risk, or 30-40% on USDC on Aftermath at a medium risk (Perps vault where your funds are used for market making). I've personally been in the Aftermath vault for a few weeks and have earned on average about 42% APY on the funds I've had in there for this duration.
