Key features of the script include:

- 1 Reads a list of recipients from a file and subsequently sends them a customized email
- 2 Reads an email body text from another file
- 3 Supports multiple attachments for the email
- 4 Embeds an image associated with the product seamlessly within the email
- 5 Utilizes STMP with SSL/TLS and credentials to send emails through a configurable email server
- 6 Counts and reports successfully sent emails and any failed email attempts

Potential use cases could involve marketing campaigns or newsletters, where a large number of users are being targeted. The script could be particularly attractive to boost product popularity in advertising scenarios.
