Family if you ask me, always there for you, through thick and thin. Don't get me wrong, i got a best friend, kinda like my brother and my blood brother and i don't talk, so i guess everyone has their own sphere when it comes to this topic in my opinion.

diablospartan - May 11, 2023, 9:12 pm

Family of course man

Friend are near you when its sunshine ,when its dark you will not see many friends near you

It would always be my family for no matter what happens they were always behind my back and always there to give me support, love and care.

In the course of your life, your circle of friends may diminish gradually, while the constant presence you can rely on, both during your successes and challenges, it is your family.

Rahul007rhp - May 11, 2023, 9:55 pm

Its a combination of both i would say. Family and friends both are important to motivate you

AB51NTH3 - May 11, 2023, 9:55 pm

Friends... Family is given, friends are received. But at the same time, true friends are family/true family are friends. So I guess the question doesn't matter... All that matters is you know who has your back through too the end. Past that... fuck the bullshit.

Wrong.

Have some children and you'll see why that is not correct. Blood is always thicker. And even if it had nothing to do with kids, are you telling me your friend would motivate you more than your mom needing a surgery or on her death bed?

Family should always motivate you most subconsciously but friends can also motivate you obviously.

Pootje - May 12, 2023, 2:05 am

Both of them motivate me.

My family motivates me the most, yes of course my friends are helpful too but the impact that a family member's criticism or remark about my doing on me has on me no one can match. Then if we talk about motivation I'm sure that the only one who can motivate me is myself, the real challenge is always to overcome myself and improve in every aspect.

For me it's friends because I share the same hobbies with them etc. You choose your friends based on interest. You can't choose your family and a lot of times you don't have the same interests.

Richy - May 14, 2023, 8:55 am friends family doesn't at all sadly :((

SIM-5360240 - May 14, 2023, 9:00 am

Friends obviously family is different bigg3rdude - July 8, 2023, 2:46 am

Family of course. But you definitely still friends

Justinjacks239 - July 9, 2023, 5:14 am

Friends are my life blood

Friends, they tend to be less judgmental and more supportive

Spooky - July 14, 2023, 8:00 am

Family. I dont have very many friends but am extremely close to my loved ones.

uhtred - July 14, 2023, 8:03 am

Family, and I consider the little friends I have as family!

Neil - July 14, 2023, 8:49 am

Honestly, put yourself around great people & they will all support you (in one way or another)

I definitely think family support is more in most cases, but i've had a ton of support from friends as well.

Era643 - July 14, 2023, 7:14 pm

I think it depends on what it's for because some friends are great but family can also be there

shyglitzy - July 16, 2023, 6:28 am

Friends definitely as they do not have the same kind of libidinal ties as family members do. Family members are wired to protect.

Europe - July 16, 2023, 6:37 am

Family talking from my own experience, will differ per individual.

Stunner - July 16, 2023, 7:26 am

100% Family because friends are unreliable

ChronoBiff - July 16, 2023, 7:40 am

It really depends on the situation, and what you consider a friend. In my case, I lean on my family and a few very close friends.

builderboy2003 - July 16, 2023, 5:02 pm

Both of them motivate me.

Agreed ?

DashPHP - July 16, 2023, 10:27 pm

It would have to be family. A lot of my "friends" are envious unfortunately.

diamondcf - July 17, 2023, 8:03 pm

neither, i motivate myself

casing - July 18, 2023, 2:35 pm

Friends because my whole family was killed in Afganistan.

vizasel - July 18, 2023, 9:19 pm

none, because really no one wants to see you win, besides yourself.

santi12 - July 19, 2023, 12:06 pm

Family is the best motivation you can ever have but if you go over friends it must be friends who are business related that can effect you for good.

loco014 - July 21, 2023, 8:49 pm

both but family mostly

mikeyworx30 - July 21, 2023, 11:22 pm

It depends on the subject matter. I personally would say neither.

sparks - July 27, 2023, 9:58 am

Family motivates me. I've been lucky to have their support since day one. It's tough to maintain friendships, I don't live the most social life

LeetSpeed - July 29, 2023, 6:51 am

Neither of them motivate me.

Hello, Leeke-. From the replies above, it seems that family is the general consensus for who is more supportive: friends or family. However, everyone is different and it ultimately depends on the situation. I hope this helps!

Omniscient - July 29, 2023, 5:03 pm

I'll go with family more than friends. However, I find real motivation comes from within.

littleblueguy24 - July 30, 2023, 6:05 am

Definitely friends. I have no family.

BTB84 - July 30, 2023, 9:23 am

Family can forgive you for every of your mistakes.

It's not easy like that for your friends, even your partner.

MTVTV - July 30, 2023, 5:41 pm

Definitely friends for me.

opacjh6153 - July 31, 2023, 1:00 pm

sometimes friends, sometimes family

Fresku - July 31, 2023, 1:12 pm

Neither of these.

I grind for myself, for my direct interests. Might sounds very selfish, but I'd like to make sure I'm doing well before taking care of others.

R^ptor - July 31, 2023, 2:19 pm

Family when it comes to improving my life

But friends if I want to have a good night

Zed13 - August 1, 2023, 6:14 am

Family of course. You choose your friends based on interest.
