I hope to meet real friends on the internet that become not just internet friends.

This forum is a good place for me. I think it will be interesting.

Joke's on you, we're never growing up!

Welcome to the forum, please enjoy your stay. Avoid free ebooks, and remember, if someone's selling you a way to make money, it doesn't actually make more money than selling the technique.

Welcome to the forum, it's a pleasure to welcome new members, in any case being able to meet live people you know in here could be a little inconsiderate since it's a hacking-themed forum and with services not too common to all. In any case I'm sure you will be able to find someone to relate to, remember to read the Help Docs and for any question do not hesitate.

Really? Avoid free Ebooks? I spoke to a hacker on tinychat that said they're great for learning if you can understand them properly. Is there any certain ones to avoid?

I meant more in reference to the "quick buck" ebooks -- the worst you'll get from free technical material is outdated and irrelevant material. Very little harm there, as long as you don't install anything.
