Thread: I kicked someone's ass today and I feel great about it

javierpena - June 15, 2023, 10:22 am

Probably its just the adrenaline and the fact that I vowed to never tell this story to anyone I know in real life got me writing this post so I will try to make the long story short.

First something you should know about me - all my life I've always avoided physical confrontations by any means necessary out of fear and the fact that as a teenager I was tall but really skinny and I couldn't compete in terms of brute force with the bullies. All my life I've always wanted a bully to get what they deserve and be so afraid (as I have been many times) that he would not think for a second that he would do something hurtful to others again.

So here is the story:

I was walking back home from work. There is a main street with an alley for bicycles. My road to home goes through that main street, then I have to turn into a really narrow path across a small garden. I hear bell ringing behind me and I see a woman on a bicycle standing still signalling the passengers to let her pass through. She is really polite about it and waits patiently for everyone to make a way.

So I am standing next to this kid. He is around 17-18 and clearly pumped up from "food supplements". He makes a way for her to pass and as she starts passing by he spits on her and moves along in the typical bully way of walking.

I don't know what got into me but I figured this is my chance. I shouted at him about what he has done and he pretended not to hear. I shouted again and he stopped. I went right in front of his face and started shouting asking him why he spit on the woman. He started speaking to me in a foreign language which got me even more frustrated because you cannot be a visitor in another country and act like that. I got extremely furious shouting to him to speak in our main language.

The bully got cocky and he was pretty jacked, so I knew if I don't scare him enough he will fuck me up. I very calmly opened my backpack where I keep my taser. I buzzed a few times near him just so he will know that I am serious. All of a sudden his tone got squeaky and apologetic. He asked me again, this time in English, why am I angry (as if he didn't knew what he has done just seconds ago). I spit on him and told him in his native language "THATS WHY!".

I guess he realized he cannot talk his way out of the situation so he turned around, waved and started walking really fast.

This is when I felt rage inside me like never before. I chased him for a few steps and kicked the shit out of him from his back. I know that this is a shitty move, but I don't care, he deserved it.

Whitelord - June 15, 2023, 12:19 pm

I assed someones kick today. Felt gay

Hungry4Knowledge - June 15, 2023, 3:20 pm

Because the woman was moving on the bicycle his only option was to spit. I can imagine such a vile person could do a lot worse should he meet a single woman just walking on this narrow pathway and no one is around.

I agree with your actions. Bullies need to be put in their places.

Therefore I do clap and cheer for you. ?

Lol, no, she was old. I didn't even know if she was there to witness the whole thing, because of tunnel vision. Also he spit around the torso and legs area, not her face, so she may have not noticed.

Honestly, after everything was over I realized what I have done in broad daylight in front of lots of people. I started walking towards my usual path but in less than a minute I got super paranoid that maybe someone will follow me to my home to take revenge. I turned around, and I shit you not - I crossed half of my city and I got home in two hours of wandering the streets randomly out of paranoia that someone might be following me.

As I explained in the OP this is not who I am. I have been in 2 fights in my life except this 3rd one, and both times they beat the shit out of me, because at the very first sign of immediate physical danger my soul is transformed into that of a little mouse. I am not ashamed of saying this and I feel great that I overcame this major stopper in my life.

No matter how good you are with words (and I am very very good) there are situations in life where you simply can't escape physical violence. Now I know that I will at least have the confidence to defend myself next time this happens

Sometimes the best lessons in life is to get your ass beat but I grew up different than most I guess. I don't like to fight and I can admit I got my ass kicked a few times. But when you fight it out you grab them and help at the end.

I don't think he was the kind of person who would have grabbed me and helped if the situation was reverse.

This was not a fair fight between people who have disagreements for a long time and know each other. If I fight someone who I know and things have gotten so worse between us that physical escalation is unavoidable, yes, I will help this person after that and try once again to clear things up.

But this is not an enemy, this is a former friend and misfortune, stupidity (on both ends), or whatever the fuck has gotten your relationship to this situation.

The person that I beat up - I wouldn't help him even if I see him drowning

The person that I beat up - I wouldn't help him even if I see him drowning I get what you're saying but this same attitude got my cousin shot years ago over arm wrestling. As you get older you will realize that it doesn't matter. I'm not being rude at all but you need to understand that they just aren't worth your time.

I agree with you. I am not planning to finding this man and pursuing more violence or become a vigilante and test my luck on the streets every other week. Since this happened I have analyzed the situation over and over again and with a clear mind I know how bad things could have escalated.

You should have actually tazed him. No one should be treated like that especially not woman. I wonder in what country this happened in. I assume a non-european country as tasers are illegal in the eu? and therefore it wouldn't be smart to expose yourself with one in public

I'm glad you were able to scare him off. Avoidance is always the best strategy. Whatever the argument or disappointment, it's not worth it unless your life is on the line
