Thread: Can scamming lonely customers be a way to fix the dating market?

Hey, I was just wondering about how scamming and belittling customers would have an impact on the actual dating market?

First of all, im talking about lonely customers, not horny ones just looking to jerk off (or have sex).

If many and many e-whores would scam and belittle them, without revealing anything about the thing they're males, would it save, or atleast have some big impact on the daitng market?

Most of these lonely customers, that are just looking to talk or get in a relationship with the "girl" they're talking with, are absolute simps. And simping is one of (if not the only) the main reason that leaded to this situation.

Scamming them out and hurting them in the deepest part of their heart will probably make them realize, and they could slowly change.

Actual "normal" people gets out of this bluepill situation after getting hurt (usually when they're still teenagers) by their girlfriend or some random girl, but many of these "lonely customers" never got any occasion of getting verbally hurt by any girl. And it would prolly never happen in their entire adult life, as girls either wont care or just use them out (telling truth, or being rude will not be profitable for them).

It would not ruin the e-whoring market at all, as horny people (even married/in a relationship) will still be there, and they aint simps at all (most of them are even freaks), they just looking to pay for nudes and nothing else.

What do you guys think?

Don't scam people. It's a fast track to ending up in jail or getting beaten up by someone who feels hurt. You never know if that foolish person is really someone dangerous. Once you're wrong is enough to end very badly.

It doesn't matter if you are in Nigeria or in a village in Russia, there will always be someone with time and money to find you.
