It won't make it completely anonymous, but what you can do is chain hop. And utilize washing methods on other chains, like ETH or XMR.

You don't need to swap to XMR and then swap to BTC to "anonymize" your btc, that is just extra steps, especially if you use an exchange that requires KYC/AML.

Coinjoins, mixers, can do this pretty well.

Omniscient - July 3, 2023, 8:41 pm

So if you know that it's not fully anonymous, and if that's what you want, why are you using it at all?

DRSHEL - July 4, 2023, 3:19 am

Then maybe the best thing we got after all of your comment is step 1 : transfare the coin using mixer and coinjoin

step 2 : swap the money using denc exchange maybe like simpleswap from BTC to XMR

step 3 : moving xmr to more than new xmr wallet

will make it 1000% anonymous

You'd lose quite a nice sum in fees, for no reason.

If you bought BTC with card or on an exchange that is linked to you, then I would send it to somewhere else that is not linked to your info but allows you to swap for other currency.. like Exodus. Then swap BTC to XMR in Exodus.

After this send the XMR to another hardware XMR wallet.

And just to be extra careful, get like a ledger or something and send that XMR to the ledger.

And you are anonymous sir.

I wouldn't consider an Exodus wallet swap to be anonymous at all.

Exodus probably keeps track of all these swaps and it probably has wallet identifiers. They will know the swap addresses and that one crypto just got exchanged to another. Ever wonder why Exodus doesn't support Swaps in Monero?

If you're gonna do a swap, do it directly on a swap site between two independent wallets and even better use TOR or a VPN when doing so.

You're right that Exodus knows it's your XMR when you keep them in your Exodus-wallet. If you send them from "Exodus-wallet" to "MoneroWallet2" they can keep track that it's your's there aswell. But when you send the XMR from "MoneroWallet2" to "MoneroWallet3" they can't trace them anymore right? Since there is no blockchain to follow transactions.
