Thread: What do you use to track movies? \(movies suggestions welcome!\)

Hi,

I've tried a bit of everything:IMDB: Not good enough at recommendations.

TasteMonster: I like the idea, but I don't think they update their movie/series catalog anymore. Also, the UI is terrible.

TasteDive: Not looked too much into it because I'm afraid I'll use as much time as I wasted on TasteMonster but to no avail. Also, you can't filter at all, so no selection of horror, action, thriller, etc. - I do like the idea of it not only being movie/series specific, but also can find music, books, games etc. as well.

Have you tried Rotten Tomatoes?

They have top lists. I found quite a few surprisingly good TV shows when I was craving for a new one....

I don't think he wants to keep record of what he watched.....he needs recommendations what to watch next.

Sometimes I find it funny how you native English speakers take every word literally from foreigners lol

By the way, do you have a spare real G tutorial laying around? Please send it to us.

Thank you! Is it only top lists, or does it have personalized recommendations as well?

A good movie that I watched was Corner Office, some parts are hard to watch (not gore)

I actually don't track it, only mark it watched on google, but I've heard letterboxd is good too.

I just go on recommendations from friends. I talk about movies and tv shows a lot so it's a common conversation topic. A lot of times someone will talk about a movie on here and I'll give it a shot.
