

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: A hacker who was part of a ransomware group...

yoohoo - August 14, 2023, 4:35 am

A hacker who was part of a ransomware group that targeted hospitals in 2016 regretted his actions because due to the interruption in medical system, his own mother couldn't receive timely treatment and died. He later realized that he caused his mother's death in the hospital hit by his ransomware. He decided to quit the group and help the authorities track down his former associates.

This hacker's story shows that ransomware is not a victimless crime. It can have real and devastating consequences for innocent people who need vital services. Hackers who profit from ransomware should rethink their targets and their motives. Instead of being villains, they could be robin hoods in the cyber world. They could target unethical businesses or most unwelcomed businesses, such as those that exploit workers, harm the environment, or evade taxes. They could use their skills and resources to expose corruption, injustice, or fraud.

Hungry4Knowledge - August 14, 2023, 6:56 am

Story bleeds from thousands of wounds...

Lucidif3r - August 14, 2023, 2:08 pm

He was using a Gameboy at time of the hack ?

Jerry Smith - August 14, 2023, 2:17 pm

This is legit your second post and you give no context at all.

illuminati? - August 14, 2023, 10:28 pm

(Aug 14, 2023 11:39 AM)phantomman55 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I don't hackers have feelings... I am sure that guy didn't leave the group. He must have got lawyers and sued the hospital to get even more money. lol

This seems likely.