I've actually already tried this in the past.

Tried suggesting that we offer a new daily check-in award for increased activity. We could even make a set of them:

100 posts (consecutive ofc) / 250 posts / 500 posts / and then the last would be the ultimate 1,000 consecutive days.

It would take time, but would be such a flex once you have even the 250 one. I'd legit love to see this happen.

To achieve this goal effectively, it's advisable to start pursuing it from the very day it was introduced. The longer you delay taking action on it, the more challenging it will become to accomplish.

10% seems a lot for me, not fluent in english and don't have enough time to post 60 times per day haha.

I believe having 100 additional posts for the upcoming year would be fantastic, and it would be beneficial if there were daily progress limits, making the entire month a period of consistent effort for everyone. Perhaps, implementing a 5% target could be considered, so regardless of how many posts you create, only 5% would contribute to your awards goal. This approach would encourage everyone to stay active throughout the month, or perhaps for a full effort over 20 days time, rather than achieving the award instantly within a day or two. ?

Capping the daily earn amount would be interesting, so you have to post at least 20 different days. That would be even better, and harder. I like this!

If i was on the first day, I would have gotten that 600 posts within the day, ngl. Probably within the first 12 hours since that was when the most activity was.

Heavy work, I'd say probably around 1k posts for the month (mainly bc of activity). I can average 1 post per minute if others are responding just as quickly, 100 posts per day is easy af.

Its doable man no need to rely on lounge either , could just post other places honestly activity wise.

You can create threads to navigate activity to your thread too , many ways. Just need to dedicate time that's about it. But if its 2k or 3k post that one is gona require much more effort honestly.

I am just getting the awards whenever I can. I don't think I am gona grind if it hits 2k+ post. Too much.

Yeah, I assumed it'd be just as easy to get both, since the lounge is where most people are spamming & 500-600 is not much of a difference.

Only need 500 in lounge and i can get 100 anywhere else for the most part, haha

Awesome new award, Omni! Thanks for hosting fun challenges like this.

I have been on vacation but this has definitely brought me back to being more active.

I am pleased that more and more people are getting involved in this award.

Since about 15 people already got the award, I fear it will become hard for the rest of us to maintain the high level of activity required to get the award.

It surely is since I'm also a busy person. I don't even know how to maintain interaction once I initiated it.

Haha I missed it , I got busy and I don't have time for that. I was grinding initially I needed to stop after a few posts apparently.

I guess I wasn't serious enough sadly. The orange one was the OG color dawg.

On the flip side it's going to make it more and more meaningful, impressive, etc. Double edged sword essentially. This is my first time going for one the pumpkins and it's definitely been a grind, but it's also been a lot of fun actively talking with a ton of different members and regarding a bunch of different topics. I look forward to the challenge of the pumpkin awards in years to come ?

Big congrats to all those who achieved the award.

I will leave the Award Goal on the page for 48 hours so that those who might be offline can go to the page and still earn it.

Thanks to everyone for making the event a huge success imho with lots of HF activity. I do appreciate it.

Does this help your situation too? It sounds like what he mentioned is for people that hit 600 before the HF time hit November 1st, but just hadn't gone to the awards page to register/redeem it. Hopefully I'm wrong and it helps your case too though.

Uhh I read it as we have 48 hours to earn the award still in case we were offline and weren't able to claim it. I'm assuming that includes reasons like time zone differences and whatnot? I'm not sure now D:

Either way though if it's based on whether you hit the 600 posts before the time ended, that you get the award? As in basically the 20 posts that didn't get counted for me would then now be counted to deal with the different time zones and members offline and whatnot?

I also just checked the awards page and looked at the other two Octoberfest pumpkins and members were still earning them on November 1st, both of the awards as well. So I'm assuming that's what's happening here? Is that the 48 hours is that same grace period that the prior two awards had?

So based on how I'm taking it, you're half right. It seems like he's simply providing an extra period of time for people to go to the awards page (since this is required to register the actual completion of the award progress) in order to claim the award incase they haven't done so yet for whatever reason. This would of course only apply to those that had 600 posts before HF started a new day today though at 12:00 AM PST or 12:10 AM PST when Stanley created a new check in thread, whichever it goes by. Basically people that if they hopped on right now and went to the awards page, it says 100%, but that hadn't gone to the page yet. As we already know, you did not have 600 posts by then, but rather just a bit after since you were going off of Alaskan time which is an hour later. I can't recall or find anything about him previously providing an extension to keep working towards the award after October is over and honestly it wouldn't make much sense to do so given people have the whole month to see it being a thing and work towards it. Yes, someone may be in the Alaska time zone for instance and so they're behind by an hour compared to local HF time, but it's incredibly unlikely that someone in that scenario also just barely misses getting the award. Just a super specific and unlucky situation in your case sadly.

You'll notice that for anyone getting it on the 1st of November though, it's before 12:00 AM PST which is the time HF seems to start a new day. That or 10 minutes later when Stanley posts the new check in thread. Surely if even a day of grace period was provided than at least 1 person would have gotten the award later on, but as you can see, that isn't the case. So yeah it seems to just be a couple of people that finished the award just barely in time is all and before HF started a new day based on it's local time. You didn't get to 600 posts by that local time of HF's and so your progress halted and here we are in this unfortunate situation.

If he follows suit with what he did last year than the next one should be around Christmas time and for 3 ornament awards (could be more or less this time of course) that are given randomly from posting like HUM eggs are. Really hoping it happens again as last year I didn't get involved and I'm beating myself up for it now lol. If nothing else though, Octoberfest will no doubt return next year so that's something.

Yeah he told me about that too. Part of me feels like if it was going to be allowed by Omni that it would have happened by now as I assume they tried to set it up right away. Could be wrong regarding either of those things though. Honestly I can see why it may be denied, but considering the fact that Cooli just barely missed the deadline for the award based on HF time and also technically didn't miss it based on Alaska time, if they both want to do the transfer than hopefully they're able to.
