Thread: Best computer/office chair

Prettykitty - October 8, 2023, 5:30 pm

Been shopping around for an ergonomic chair. I've tried the Steelcase leap v2, and am trying to get one lightly used on the market. Also heard Hermon Miller Aeron is ok too. The used ones go for $650-1200. I saw one that was basically new listed for free a few nights ago, but someone snagged it before I could!

Wondering if anyone has recommendations. What gaming/office/computer chair do you have? Is it good value and durable?

The "Corsair TC100 Relaxed" chair is my favorite. I think it has practically no cons.

Do you it? Seems good, I think I prefer one that has 4D arms though.

Posting here to follow what kind of suggestions OP gets for a good quality chair.

Proof - October 8, 2023, 6:55 pm

It's probably not the best one on the market, but I have found it to be significantly better on my back and neck compared to my old chair.

We had Herman Miller ones at my company, but mine got destroyed and well I went with this one.

I can get you 15% off btw if you want one. DM me Prettykitty

Never been picky. I'd say, just look until you see something you like the look of and then check reviews.

The biggest struggle for me has always been trying to find the best computer chair. Having a fucked up back and sitting in a chair makes it worse

I need to find a good chair as well, it's really important for your posture and well-being.

That's a solid suggestion. I did come across that on amazon.ca Oline ErgoPro $479. I can get a Steelcase v2 leap in like new condition for about CDN$400.

Still hunting around for used, since those seats can be reupholstered. Did your company have the Aeron? They sell replacement seats I think.

I have know this local group buy guy for Herman miller that gets them brand new with manufacture warranty, $1,620 + tax for both the Aeron and Embody models.

Just send me the model or a direct link to the product please and I will get you the price. It's not refunding or anything like that-- It is a membership club I am part of.

I would gladly help ya out.

I spent £400 on my chair and I love it to bits. Built for long term use and posture stability.

bullets - October 9, 2023, 1:33 am

If you have a large budget Herman Miller, if a medium budget Secret Lab

Bastille - October 9, 2023, 2:11 am

It usually sounds stupid to people but I'm using a wheel chair.

Very comfortable, I have modules where I can put me feet on and play with because it rotates, I think it helps me to concentrate when I'm studying, there are comfortable modules where I can put my arms, sometimes I also play with the wheels doing wheeling and I can tilt the back when I'm watching movies and series

My friend recently got a desk from them, it's a hit or miss with the quality these days. Also the price is the thing that keeps rising, of course.

The cheapest desks are shitty, I hit one with a fist and it made a hole on the desk ":)". Price was like 90€ so I didn't expect the best quality tho but it was like cardboard.

Still deciding.

I saw a Markus on the marketplace for free, but the seller isn't responding. I might get a free chair in the mean time. Have always been leaning towards Steelcase v2 leap, or Steelcase amia, Steelcase gesture, or Herman Miller Aeron. Any of those on the used market (non-refurbished), anything lightly used I can either re-upholster or steam clean.

Herman miller. Pricey, but well worth the price that includes their 12 year warranty. Basic office chairs last a few years before needing a new one and they are not nearly as comfortable as a herman miller.

I've heard mixed things about these. Some swear by them and will die on the hill that they're the best by far. Others say they're overrated and or at least too expensive for the quality they provide. Not to say that quality is bad, but just that the price tag isn't worth it value wise compared to some other options out there. If you're working from home for instance though or just spend a lot of time at a desk setup, a good chair is honestly the most important thing. I actually should be getting a new one myself sometime in the near future. My current one is alright, but it's nothing special and I know a lot of the time isn't doing my back/posture any favors lmao.
