If you have login credentials, you can try emulating a device and running a bruteforce macro script on the pin code. I'm not sure what restrictions snapchat has on the pins though. A similar thing can be done on Android devices by sending key strokes.

This is where you'll need to do your own research. If you don't know how to either find someone to run this for you or write a script to do this then you don't have many options.

It'd probably be easier to give your target some greasy food, and SE them into typing on the phone, taking a photo of the grease marks and working out the pin from that. Absurd? Yes.
