Paid user BTC, he has not sent account details yet.

Are you disputing the right contract? This is 26th September contract. You have another from yesterday with this member.

I believe you meant to dispute this one above.

Unfortunately it was never originally accepted.

Sotark - October 22, 2023, 2:26 pm

Correct, the first contract expired and he did not respond to the most recent one.

Interesting. So why would you send money to him if the contract you made yesterday (not this one) wasn't agreed to by him?

I'm not sure how this answers my question? Your contract from yesterday (not this one from 26th September) status is "initiated" not "active deal"?

This.

This.

No, but you didn't explain it properly in your thread. To me, it looked like you bought two different accounts. One on 26th September and one yesterday.

What's even more confusing is that it looks like you sent the money before the user accepted your contract.

Shouldve waited for him to accept the contract, received the product and then sent the crypto (as its irreversible). ?

I'm assuming you're referring to this contract, which was initiated on 21st October but never accepted by the seller?

It literally has the same thread link in the contract, only thing that's different is the amount.

At the end of the day, a contract was used, for the account in question, and OP was scammed. No reason to make a mountain out of a mole hill.

Plus communication was via convo.

True. I'm not trying to stir things up. But if there are two different contracts for different amounts, one on 26th September and one on 21st October, it looks like two different accounts and two different deals. OP didn't properly explain this in his thread, so it's good to understand what's actually going on.

Hope you'll be able to get your account OP or at least your money back.

Good luck resolving this.
