Thread: Remove dangerous label from website

Swpkc - January 22, 2024, 3:09 pm

I have a website that acts as a login to collect informational for educational purposes. I put in the code no indexing and even added plugins to ensure no crawling but Google went ahead and labeled the site as dangerous. I don't want this site in Google search.

Anyways I can't ask Google console to review the site as it appears what it's acting like for educational uses. So now I'm unsure what to do...

Is the domain labeled as dangerous or just the pages? Would removing the pages and creating new ones fix this?

Is the domain screwed? I'd like to keep the domain

How can I either hide my url so systems like Gmail don't flag the url as dangerous, or how to I fix the domain/site to give it a clean slate?

Help is appreciated.

Have a read through ALL of the content at these two links:

Getting flagged for email spam is an entirely unrelated and different issue. There are any multitude of reasons why you could be flagged as a suspicious domain. Check spamhaus and other email blacklists to see if your domain is on them.

Well the issue with mine is that because Google marked the site as dangerous, and I use gmails platform to send the link, they communicate and see it's a bad link so they don't send it... how do I fix this is my ultimate question. I want to be able to send the url or cover url, and have gmail send the email with the link and not, not deliver it
