Thread: Favorite first person shooter! Controversial opinions only!

????0?? ??? - January 27, 2024, 8:17 pm

Get ready for an adrenaline-pumping discussion, folks! As for me, I have to say that Call of Duty Warzone tops my list of favorite first-person shooters. But let's not stop there - I want to hear from all of you! Let's gather 'round and share our top picks, because this is a time for battle, not just talk.

Engage your enemies fight for the right to claim the very best first-person shooter!

Modern Warfare 2 by far.

Nothing has come close since the good ol' days.

Now everyone camps or hides with a sniper and doesn't actually face you.

That was the last time everyone just ran at each other and played.

yes, but camping is such a core mechanic to the game. It seems as if you were not playing it as the developers intended lol.

Fuck that.

Come out and fight me like a man.

Black Ops 2 hands down. That game was just so smooth. I've been enjoying the new MW3 but it's not a good enough game to be called the best at anything lol. Now that I play KBM I wanna try out Battlefield and other games too though.

rust because of the other elements to the game with that said all FPS games are shit now due to the massive cheater problem.

Call of Duty, but that game started going downhill with the Activision/Infinity Ward drama in 2010.

I played a bit of Battlefield 3 but couldn't really get into any other parts of the series.

I don't really play FPS anymore.

I would probably say Battlefield 4/5. The immersion is truly incredible.

Halo tbh, mostly for the campaigns though. Although infinite's mp is decent.

Doom Eternal is so underrated as a single player FPS. On higher difficulty modes it's like a dark souls game but fast-paced FPS. It's tough but gratifying when you destroy a room of demons that kept respawning for what felt like forever only getting harder and harder as the fight goes on. The story is awesome too.

BF2042 is actually pretty good in its current state
