Thread: How do you plan on spending your Valentine's Day?

Yanix - February 7, 2024, 6:37 am

What special plans do you have in store for Valentine's Day this year?

Have you made any exciting arrangements for how you'll celebrate Valentine's Day?

Ore you still on the lookout for your Valentine's Day companion?

Jamika - February 7, 2024, 6:40 am

Damn a normal day, i dont have enough cash to spend on love gifts lol

Charlie Sheen - February 7, 2024, 6:48 am

I'll probably cook something at home, get her a box of chocolates and a bottle of wine. As long as the kids are here it's difficult to try to go somewhere really nice to eat. I may look into buying her a necklace or something. She has so much already I don't know what's left that she doesn't.

diiaz - February 7, 2024, 6:52 am

Gonna grab some roses and we're going out for dinner that evening

Wow brother that sounds like a sweet, thoughtful and cozy plan! It's wonderful to focus on creating a special atmosphere at home and the idea of surprising her with a necklace adds a lovely touch of romance.

It's really hard to go somewhere when you got kids and I feel yah ?

Bro, may taking a leisurely stroll in the park or wandering around your neighborhood together could suffice for Valentine's Day, as long as it means spending quality time with her would be enough.

I was just looking on the Tiffany website at some earrings for her. They jacked up their prices insane over the last few years. I had bought her a bunch of the last few years and I swear it was 60% cheaper when I was buying before. That's just nuts. I'm a little in shock over seeing the new prices.

Maybe that's because of the law of demand and supply that makes them expensive ?

I'm sure it has more to do with corporate greed than it does supply and demand. Sadly a lot of businesses have been shameless in their show of greed ever since Covid happened. We get stuck paying more for no reason at all.

It's frustrating to see how some businesses prioritize profits over people, especially during challenging times like the pandemic. Fair pricing practices always set aside due to greediness.

oh man, I don't even know when valentine's day is. Probably not gonna do much. Just stay home and enjoy the day. The day before that is a holiday for where I live so I'll be off work Monday-Wednesday. Now I'll probably go grab some steaks Cooking at home! No more going out for three noodles and one meatball for $24.57. Chicken, rigatoni, garlic bread, in vodka sauce for the old lady!

tyvex - February 7, 2024, 7:35 pm

I'll be honest I have no idea. The wife said today she was planning something as she is the bread winner right now, so I guess I'll report back when valentines day comes. Knowing her though its something sappy and romantic.

My fiancé is taking it easy for now in preparation for the next surgery, so she's been homebound and it hasn't been easy for her. So, with that said, she's fully aware I'll be at work all day and not prepared for the flowers being delivered in my absence.

Nothing special, just a usual day for me and my wife. We don't really feel like its necessary to show our love and appreciation for eachother on a random day decided by society. We celebrate our relationships on days that are meaningfull to us and our relationship, and I kind of prefer it that way. Also everything on valentine is absurdly busy and expensive just for them to throw everything into heart shaped moulds. Not my vibe tbh

I don't know yet ;)

Which ever comes first.

So far we been together almost a year. She's turned me into a better man.

Simplicity goes a long way with woman, or at least most of them. A romantic date to the beach is thoughtful and makes for a memorable time.
