If you chose to learn any skill at all in the next month, which skill would you choose, and why?

This is just a generalized question. It doesn't necessarily need to apply to your life or lifestyle. It could be a dream skill. Maybe a skill that you've always wanted to do, but never could because of limitations? Maybe you've heard talk about some kind of investment skill or skills involving stocks and bonds.

Whatever the case, what skill would you learn in the next month if given the chance?

For me, it would be would probably be forensic psychiatry. I've always found that specific skill to be of a very large interest for me. Unfortunately, you're in school for that field for like a decade or more, and that's just something I can't commit to for several reasons including financial reasons. For those of you that don't know, a forensic psychiatrist is a doc who specializes in the field of mental health and law. They assess the defendant or victim, or both, to examine their mental state and profile them. If you've ever seen Law & Order: SVU, it's the character that B.D. Wong plays (Can't think of his name).

Would language be considered a skill? I would like to know more than just English.

Absolutely. Anything that requires learning is by all means, considered a skill. Learning in itself is a skill.

I've also considered other languages. Mostly Japanese, but I wouldn't mind learning Deutsch and Spanish.

I really wana improve my english vocabulary. I seem to stutter a lot recently.

Mostly because I work from home and overtime built my own language (basically roadmen english lmao).

However this is a problem when speaking in a formal setting...

I mean I already know how to airbrush paint pretty good already. If I could be better ya why not

Hungry4Knowledge - March 9, 2024, 12:28 am

Calisthenics on a very top level. That would be awesome.

Komodo - March 9, 2024, 12:49 am

The piano.

Which I was rich as a kid and learned when I was young.

Or had more time now, I'm sure I could but I'm just too busy right now.

For me it definitely has to be something that can help me build my wealth! Maybe learn how to be good at investment type of stuff. Like trading crypto and buying stocks and shares using the graph etc to predict when to buy and sell etc.

I would like to learn the art of glass blowing. That would be amazing.

an4l 1st - March 9, 2024, 6:35 am

I would like to add rust to my repertoire...

I dont learn it because it is useless for me :(

I guess the bottom line is that we can only really master something that is useful to us...

I actually got to watch how glass blowing is done way back when the Fenton factory was still open and did tours for the general public. It was very cool to see, and I also wanted to do that at one point. It's definitely an art. A hot art. Literally. It's sooo hot where they do the glass blowing at from all the flame. If you can ever find a tour for glass blowing, I'd highly recommend it for sure.

Agree completely! I've watched them work at small village demonstrations and it's completely fascinating.

I'd want to learn extreme survivalism and survival tactics. Reason being is because I think we might have another civil war in the US soon, or we might get the new WWII patch. I'd want to learn how to chop down trees, build a cabin in the woods, hunt, fish, grow a garden and crops to survive, use a first-aid kit, use a radio in case communications go down, etc.

Because when war strikes it would be nice to be prepared.
