Thread: Obsessed with money but broke

For years I've been trying everything to make money online. As desperate as gambling, learning skills from dumb course sellers, blowing money here, and have had little success. Maybe I'm a bit too scatterbrained, but it gets demoralizing. Had small success with epimping but nothing that scaled. Currently experimenting with the botting space and have a knack for social engineering on discord so i'll see how that goes after a few technical fixes. I can't give up and am willing to do just about anything. How are people out here making money? How do I go about finding a legit mentor and not just someone selling a course? I'm hungry and can't be the only one ?

There's a lot of people selling eBooks, but let's be real. If someone has a damn good way to make money, they won't share it. Most of the methods people share are saturated, or the person sharing it has a means to profit from you.

Or you can always work on some task sites: <https://revenueherald.com/top-gpt-sites/>

Keep working at it. You'll find something eventually. Or, find ways to make money in the real world...

It's the reality of many many many people... Including myself.

The trick is to just keep going and if you need funds then you just gotta get a part time job. Use every minute you got wisely. IF you're truly working on high income skillset everyday, opportunities WILL come your way. This is facts.

Well it takes time to hit the jackpot, but stop doing dumb shit like gambling and buying ebooks. E-pimping can be good for money but it's not doable in the long-term for me, I don't want to go that route.

Bad position to be in!

I've personally found that trying something that's currently being done, but with a twist, will yield some profit. Never huge like a lot of people will promote, but it makes enough to help pay the bills.
