Some Words of Advice..

Doesn't matter how much hate you have for someone else, it's never going to improve your situation. You're still going to be in the same position. So while you're investing so much energy in negative thinking, the person you're hating on will continue to flourish... and you'll continue to be miserable. Change your negative thinking, its why you're in the position you're in now. Lol.

Drugs can be a nice outlet at times.. can't say I haven't divulged in some myself. One thing I noticed about psychedelics though, the trip you have will be dependent on how you're feeling prior to taking said drug. So like if you're angry, then you're likely going to have a bad trip. And if you're in a good mood, it usually leads to a good trip. Never got to try mushrooms, but I did try dust when I was in my 20s.

Very true, although my first acid trip (and first psychedelic experience) was 2 days after a painful break-up, and it was an AMAZING trip. But I understand what you're saying :)

You still indulge in acid nowadays? Or have you hung up the towel. My days of any hard drugs are done. I only smoke marijuana now

Thats right ,holding grudge with someone will keep negative energy inside you and you will not fix nothing and you just put more poison inside you

Undead - April 15, 2024, 10:52 am

If enough hate can be manifested then it could have an impact but I agree with the message in your post.

I think negative feelings can be used as a strong motivator in the beginning. If you sit on them, they will ruin whatever they touch, but being successful in spite of someone is a lot more common than some think.

But eventually, you are holding the knife against yourself.

As for psychedelics, I have my experiences with them, I feel as if they held their purpose at specific times in my life. I definitely feel like they helped me look inward, feel better looking outward, when I used them, even though that wasn't my goal at the time.

Not everyone is going to like you so there is no point in wasting your energy trying to please everyone. Instead, focus your energy on being your true, authentic self.

Tbh.. I wouldn't care how much someone hated on me, it wouldn't change anything that I did in my day to day to life. I actually might do more of what I know if pissing them off, if its something that they have no valid reason to be upset for in the first place. I will give a perfect example..

Some people tend to get upset, or dislike a person/people for things that technically have nothing to do with them. If what someone is doing doesn't directly affect you, its not stopping your money, or stunting your growth, then why even be concerned? Why allow what someone else is doing, that has nothing to do with you, get you upset? I tend to not care what other people are doing, I'm too focused on the things going on in my own life. Life is too short to allow what others are doing, bring you down.

Humility definitely goes a long way. I never used to always be humble. It grew on me as I got older, until eventually it just settled on me. My life has been 100x better since I began being humble. Being an aggressive, dickhead unfortunately gets you nowhere in life. While it may seem cool while we were young, people usually live to regret all their dickish ways as they age.

SOUND advice my friend, your head is truly level ?

DynamicW - April 16, 2024, 6:01 am

Stay positive, focus on your own growth and success rather than wasting time and energy on negative thoughts and hate towards others. You'll find that when you're too blessed to be stressed, you attract more blessings and opportunities into your life. Keep that mindset and watch how things start to turn around for the better. Stay blessed, my friends. ?? #tooblessedtobestressed #positivity #growth #success

Very true words. Hate might motivate for a short time, but it's empty.

It's much more fulfilling to be driven by love, passion, and positivity. Hate only breeds more negativity and resentment, whereas love and positivity can lead to growth, happiness, and fulfillment. Choose to be motivated by what brings out the best in you, not the worst.

Sounds funny in a forum full of hackers, but this is very true. I've seen it over and over, and experienced it myself.

Dust aka angel dust. From what I know, it comes in two forms. There is a powder form, that I'm guessing you either sniff or shoot. And then there is the kind you smoke, that's the one experimented with. It's burnt mint leaves, doused in embalming fluid. There are some other chemicals involved in the process, but I don't know the full details. Shit makes you hallucinate like crazy. Funny thing is, I didn't even start using it purposely. I was in like middle school on my way to high school, and I already started smoking marijuana at the time. We were having a session, where everyone rolled up their own blunt, and we passed them around the room. One of the guys in the room wasn't from the neighborhood, and had just moved from NYC. He laced his blunt with the dust, and fucked my whole world up. I don't remember much after we started smoking. I just knew the next day that something wasn't right, I couldn't recall anything I did after we started smoking. After speaking to some other people that were there, they experienced the same feeling. Long story short, the guy eventually admitted to lacing his blunt with dust. Shrooms was always something I wanted to try, but they never show up in my area. At this stage of my life, the only shit I mess with is weed. Had enough fun during my 20s for a lifetime.
