Hello, Can your team of hackers solve this problem? I use a gaming program and the program tries to prevent people from out of state from playing on the platform. I have the program installed on my home PC (in the state) but anytime I'm not at home I try to connect to my home PC through Remote desktop to play but somehow the program could detect that I'm connecting through Remote desktop and then prevents me from playing. I wish to find a solution to this. How to trick the program from detecting remote desktop on my home PC. Please don't hesitate to contact me with your offer if you can solve this problem for me. To bypass the gaming program's detection while using Remote Desktop, try alternative remote desktop software, a VPN, a virtual machine, or an emulator

When I first joined HF I was overwhelmed by the amount of information found on this site. As a novice, it was very difficult for me to determine what topics/subjects I would need to learn in order to reach my desired goal.

However, after signing up for this mentorship service, the fragmented pieces of information gathered from various public sources has now been solidified. This is thanks to Nomad and a couple of other helpful members in the group. I am still a long way from reaching my goal, but Nomad's attention to and consideration of my progress helps me get closer everyday.

What I love most about Nomad is his depth of knowledge. He explains concepts deeply and thoroughly in a manner which is easy for a novice like myself to understand.

It's still early days, but the mentorship I have received thus far has been excellent! ?

Are you sure this is a game? Or is it for exams and stuff related to the end qualification?

Sounds like secure browser anyway, not a game but PM me with more context if you like
