$!uo2H%gE# - May 13, 2024, 2:13 am

Around 90% of people are right-handed and only 1% are ambidextrous and are capable of using and alternating between both hands.

I would really like to learn to write with both hands.

What are you, right-handed or left-handed?

I am not sure how to edit the pool.

Jamika - May 13, 2024, 2:25 am

I am right handed

Obvious its left and wrote by mistake ?

Chung - May 13, 2024, 3:02 am

I'm right handed but I use my left hand when it comes to something you do whilst alone and feeling a bit excited.

Digitly - May 13, 2024, 3:38 am

I am right handed person

I am right handed as well. I wasn't aware how common it is.

I wonder if as time progresses, the number of left handed people decreases. I remember in 5th grade, we performed a test and the classroom consisted of roughly 60% right handed and 40% left handed. There was a kid who was learning to be ambidextrous, but that's because he broke his dominant hand.

Haha...I like light-handed. :D

I am a right handed person but I can also write with my left hand, just that it's not as beautiful with my right hand lol jcole - May 13, 2024, 7:00 am

I write with my left hand and throw with my right happygonutty - May 13, 2024, 8:28 am

I write with both hands but of course on a daily basis we don't use both at the same time so if we are talking about using a pen, the nearest hand to pick the pen is what I use to write.

For food and computer mouse, always left as I was born left handed but grew up in a religious family background that is why I was forced to use my right hand and pretty much adapted with the average right handed people in school and with right handed arm chairs. Lol.

So I guess I am ambidextrous as I can do most of the things equally.

That is quite cool. I can handle and assemble/disassemble two types of assault rifles and two types of handguns (we had to know that) but nothing else. I plan to learn how to write with both hands equally.

narubasu - May 13, 2024, 3:11 pm

left handed and comfortable with it

Absence - May 13, 2024, 4:09 pm

Right for the win! Winners circle, ya know?

I guess when I was young I started with my left but switched. I don't remember doing this.

Before becoming ambidextrous when I was a kid, what I basically did in order to achieve this was always write the alphabet many times on a notebook daily with my off-hand. Since I was born left-handed, my off-hand is my right hand so that is what I did.

Everyday in that notebook, I try to fill one page to exercise my off-hand. If I get tired of alphabet, I try to write sentences like "The quick brown jumps over the lazy dog.", my full name, my parents name and anything my dad would say me to write since he was the one who taught me to write with my off-hand.

So whenever they are around, I would use my right hand but when nobody is around I would write with my left-hand. I did this for many years now until this day whenever they are with me. Since I am no longer living with them right now, if my right hand is near a writing object then I would use my right hand then vice versa. Same applies to all objects. ?

Wizdominance - May 14, 2024, 2:16 pm

Left handed when I write and play basketball with left hand but everything with right hand. Checking google bros, I guess I am mixed handed but will consider myself left handed since I am born with it bros.

megalomaniac1 - May 14, 2024, 5:01 pm

Left handed when writing but throwing red is better with right hand.

I might apply this method, just so I can become proficient using my left hand.

Yes you can, you just need to have determination and never get tired of doing it over and over. My main motivation was that I am going to get screwed if I do not use my right hand. ?

Are speaking literally or figuratively? Just kidding.

I've slowly ventured out, attempting to do things with my left hand, such as brushing my teeth or throwing and catching a ball. I have yet to try writing or drawing though.

Kinda literally! Hahahahaha. Because my parents would always scold me for not using my right hand. Hahahahaha. ?

Yeah that is a good start. Start also picking up things with left hand, or always keeping mind that you feel like you have no right hand at all. ?

Yeah I can now use right handed scissors with ease and also right hand desks. I also won't have problems with someone eating beside me on my left since I can switch to right. ?

LMPara - May 16, 2024, 8:57 am

Always been left handed but got pretty good with my right as I'd get criticized by my cousins when I was little for doing things with my left. They would say "Left handed people are crazy!" in a thick accent and then swat at my hand lol

Did you ever find it difficult when drawing or performing other sorts of arts, like your palm dragging across your work and smearing it?

SpiritualDose - May 17, 2024, 7:02 am

I'm a lefty, and so is my son. He's only 2 but he is very much left-hand dominant.

Lucid - May 17, 2024, 7:13 am

I heard by switching it up, for example, let's say you eat/write using your right hand - if you start using the left for these things it will start to train our brain & neural connections! Easier said than done but start small and consistency is key.

As someone who is ambidextrous, I am not sure if this is true but I think I am completely normal just like any of you guys here. Hehehe. ?

Well excuse me mister 2 hands looking down on all us peasants ? nah I'm just messing! But that's so cool you are naturally ambidextrous! From what I could find quickly online the following shows that my claim is indeed TRUE.

"Yes, engaging in activities that require the use of your non-dominant hand, such as eating or writing, can indeed stimulate different regions of the brain and promote the development of new neural networks. This practice is known as "cross-dominance" or "cross-training" and can have several cognitive benefits"
