

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Any ideas regarding what to do with a large list of active clients wasting money?

Jordana Brewster - May 13, 2024, 12:17 pm

Hello!

So without going into much detail, I'm in a position where I have the contacts and details of around 10,000+ clients, all who are either subscribed, or have bought a pseudoscience medical item, the item retails for a decent value so it's defiantly not something that the average Joe can get, and there's even a lot of contradicting science if people just Google.. yet here we are.

Most of these people are in the demographic of basically "Rich" "Stay at Home" "US Based" "Middle Age Women"

What would be the best way to capitalise on their.. "ignorance" let's put it that way, I was thinking of running a donation based website related to the cause, but then I would need a payment processor that would mimic the original site. So I assume PayPal is out of contexts.

Obviously, this is morally "wrong" but in a legal context, I'm looking into just a donation platform/idea, so not looking to actually scam or "steal" a lot of money, plus as mentioned another justification is, these people are spending upwards of $100+ a month on "magic" medical devices which have been debunked so in my eyes, might as well take some profit for myself, donate some to charity and have it as a win/win.

Happy to reward anyone who has a good idea regarding the flow.

I was thinking PayPal donation campaign, but that wouldn't work as either I use a fake account (risk of getting banned) or expose myself by using my real account.

Was thinking of just a bank transfer option, but again same issue arises.

GoFundMe and all those places wouldn't work, I'm looking for a quick, one month run since I would assume eventually word will get out, while I can control the communication systems, I don't have access to every platform in full.

Let me know! [warn]

Bastille - May 13, 2024, 12:29 pm

Please stick to one thread, do not cross-post.