Tbh I don't think I'd like to erase anything... from each situation I've learned something valuable.

Can I erase an event? as in make it not happen? or is it just a memory thing? Cause if I'd just forget, I don't need to ask for it since my memory is getting worse lol However if it's remove a whole event, I'd remove my first investment in a business, got played.

Any recommendations for a hidden gem on the forum?

Sept 21 2018 I had a gun put to my head in a parking lot of a bar after stopping a guy from beating his girl.

I wasn't carrying because you know, I was at a bar and it's not legal and at the time i didn't realize how dumb that was.

He pulled the trigger but the gun jammed so he ran off.

Since that day I have had severe social anxiety, and have had probably a total of 4 alcoholic drinks since then.

In my own way of coping, I believe the anxiety developing is what led me to end up opening my own businesses from home that have blessed me in ways i'd never imagine. So i actually don't know if i would change that event or not but i lean towards yes seeing someone drop off a 12 story carpark outside a hospital to visit my dad in his trial T-cell transplant.

Poor bugger probably lost a loved one and had nobody to turn to

That was a thing you learnt from and not to make that mistake again so I would say it would be important to keep that event.

No, I'd rather not invest as that was one of those experiences that caused too much damage that I'm still paying to this day.

Besides if I hadn't of invested then my life would be a lot better today.

It would probably be something really small like something I said that was dumb during a conversation. All my large mistakes are what got me here, and I wouldn't be who I am without those. I had to learn from it.

OpSecSurvival - June 17, 2024, 4:40 am

Death... seeing death... i would erase that memory.

SO fast

Honestly, it could be any one embarrassing moment in my life. When I was in sixth grade; I just finished a Gym class and we went to the locker room. I am a bigger kid btw; always have been. Anyways. this kid comes up to me and says "I bet I could put you on your back" and I asked "Why would you want to?" So i'm finishing up, it's me and him left in the room. He comes up from behind me, picks me up, and slams me down on the concrete floor on my back and it knocks the fucking wind out of me. I had to walk out to the cafeteria which was right outside, limping and holding my back struggling to catch a breath and those little ignorant assholes laughed at me. I mean, in retrospect, it probably was funny lmao
