I use this service almost daily, and honestly, it is cheaper in the long run than buying groceries and cooking. When things go wrong, they also always own up to it and make it right. Of course, if the restaurant or driver messes up, that's a different story and out of their control.

I would say it would have to go through a lot of trouble during the process if you're doing pickup. It would cost more money than it is worth

jcole - July 17, 2024, 2:29 pm

(Jul 17, 2024 02:14 PM)Lazer Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) How is that?

The victimized party (be it the service vendor, the restaurant, or the rightful owner of funds) simply needs to contact the police in the jurisdiction the pickup occurred and provide the transaction information. The police will request the camera footage from the timestamp of the transaction and identify the 'customer' taking possession of the order. Customer's vehicle/license plate are most likely captured by store/stripmall/municipal flock cameras resulting in easy positive ID. They write a warrant for theft or any number of various fraud charges. That's all less than 8 hours of manpower(cost) from one resource, and now little Billy is going to jail, subject to litigation from the affected parties, and without recourse from his Internet food wizards.

Curious what you think the charge would be? Potentially abuse of a credit card? I'm not saying it's not possible, but I am saying that it takes a lot of effort to do everything you're talking about. Especially if you're like me, and you park away from the businesses and walk in with a ball cap on. I'm not saying getting caught is impossible, but there's a lot of other things police have to do that doesn't involve someone door dashing a meal fraudulently for $40 come on man, youre just fear-mongering.

However, ill bite.

Let's say that they called the police, they would say what?

' someone did a chargeback on us but the order was definitely picked up'. the officer would NOT investigate unless there was a potential charge.

Every potential charge has a threshold, meaning a $ amount of defraud before it can be pursued. its rare to see prosecution under $500.

Lets say that they found a new cop that really wanted an arrest and he did the investigation, he would have to prove that the person picking the food up was the person that did the chargeback. That would entail speaking to the person that did the chargeback..where are they getting card holder information...The CC company wont release that to the cop, DD wont release that to the cop(for privacy and publicity reasons)

A that point, how does the cop prove a crime occurred??

The person that picked the food up could easily decline answering questions, say they grabbed the wrong order, or just say it was ordered for them to pick up....then what?

To go even deeper into absurdity, lets say they did file charges, there isnt a district attorney in the world that would sign off on prosecuting this with the only 'evidence' being the statement by the restaurant owner.

clydeshelton - August 6, 2024, 2:13 pm

(Aug 5, 2024 09:11 PM)Lazer Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) ??

By your logic the people that pick up illegal immigrants and drive them down the highway should never be charged because they didn't smuggle them across the border.

But yeah go on and keep rationalizing theft & fraud that directly impacts legitimate consumers.

Thats literally not even remotely close to what i said, might be the worst analogy ive ever seen in my entire life.

I didnt say anything remotely close to what you are saying i did.

Whats insane is that you took what i said so personally that you gave me negative reputation. Like your feelings were so hurt that i had an opinion different than yours that you gave negative reputation. That is literally the weakest thing ive ever seen in my life, but whatever.

I never once said anything negative about you or directed towards you, i simply presented facts that proved how moot your false point was.

Never once in my response did i rationalize anything or even condone the activity, i again simply explained why what you stated was extremely unlikely.

I hope in the future you get thicker skin and dont let your feelings get hurt so bad on an anonymous forum. its never that serious.

I do Doordash, and there is no way to connect directly to us. Moreover, when ordering through the app you automatically pay a much higher price than if you were to get it yourself. Most of the time Doordash pockets the extra cash and gives us 7$ for a delivery. I don't believe this method is legit, but hey, from worker to the customers, how much could I know.
