Deany - June 18, 2024, 1:11 pm

Working in IT, the most I got in month was around 7000€ net worth at the end of a year with bonus because I worked on cybersecurity stuff and developed this activity for the company I worked for (aside of my main sys admin role)

It was probably around 15K in December / January this year. However, it caused me to burn out for almost two months, so in the end, it wasn't worth it.
That wasn't as an employee/worker, but finding work independently and dealing with several clients simultaneously.

Atm I'm working like I would if I had a full-time job and earning at least 5.5-6k/month.

I should be given royalties in the next few months, but I'm not sure what % yet.

6K will sound like a lot to some, and peanuts to others especially if they live somewhere like California.

I don't have massive buying power with 6K, though. I do live outside of London, and the average salary outside of London is just under £2K after tax, so I'm not doing too bad.

Yeah, it was like 2500 for the admin role, 2500 bonus for the end of the year and 2000 for the work I provided regarding cybersecurity.

2500 net worth (after every tax) is a normal salary for an admin in France, it's ok in France but it's not that good. The minimum wage is like 1400 net worth, but you struggle to live in France with 1400€, not that easy everyday.

Portugals - June 19, 2024, 5:38 am average $1000, own

This money is very small because inflation is at its peak in my country

Probably $10,000 back in 2013 when I had a popular minecraft server. I often spent most of the money on myself rather than re-investing in the server. This caused a snowball effect that I couldn't fix/wasn't motivated to fix once it seemed too late.

I've been a workin-joe ever since. Started at the bottom, fast food, customer service, hard labor. Now a software developer and making decent money. About 3500$ / mo after taxes
