You'll get out what you put in. If you create high quality threads, engage in conversation, read posts and learn, then you will gain a lot. If you post stupid threads like 'lol how do i hack' and beg, then you won't last long at all.

But really, Pentatonix summed it up well.

Keep in mind that your threads need to be HQ, if you have questions or need help provide as much details as possible, never forget that people devote their free time for this, be grateful.

From a negative perspective: you could come across scammers.

Well, it all depends on what you're looking for. Everyone joins for their own reasons, just the same as everyone chooses to stay or leave for their own reasons. You can expect to find a lot of information, in regards to technology and things related to it. You will also find some cool people to shoot the shit with, as well as some clowns who just want to clown around. Get in, where you fit in, is what I like to say. Breeze thru the forum, make yourself familiar with the different subsections, as well as different members that are active.. and just make yourself comfortable. The rest will all fall in place.

My advice would be to upgrade your account. Prior to upgrading my account, I wasn't that active.. but once I made the decision to upgrade, is when I got to feel the real power of the forum, and what it has to offer.. so it's something you should consider.

Everything technology related. The crypto currency section is pretty informative if you're into that sort of thing and also I like the political debates section.
