Thread: Summer DIY Projects What Are You Working On?

Melalis - June 23, 2024, 3:15 pm

Hi all,

Summer's the perfect time to tackle some DIY projects around the house. What's everyone working on? Any cool projects or renovations you're excited about?

I'm planning to build a small garden in the backyard. Looking for tips on starting from scratch if anyone has experience!

Can't wait to hear what everyone's up to!

Btw have you invented anything in your life??

Been in the process of moving for a week now. Got everything over from the old house. Been unpacking and setting up my new office. I purchased a bunch of autographed memorabilia for it that I'm excited to come in.

Actually no big projects for me, just repairing what was already destroyed by time factors

Getting a house in order, yard, some plumbing, manicuring some stuff. Lotta little things

I'll surely end up doing a handful of things, but don't currently have anything major already planned to get done.

I envy people here who have all the time in the word to make new projects, for me just to get back on track and finish unfinished tasks.

Is that in regards to work, personal stuff, or? I'm sure you could find time to do some kind of project if you really felt it needed to be done and or you really wanted to do it as well. It of course doesn't all have to be done at once or by X amount of time either.

More of both I guess. Non-stop deadlines, being a workaholic, impressing both family and workmates and all. It's too much but man I can handle it. ?

Would love to work on a project but at the moment I have nothing in mind, just finish everything then all is good, I can finally rest! ?

Well if nothing else it sounds like you're in a positive and productive place which are the kinds of things that are important. You never know when an idea may come to mind for a project either ?

No problem at all! Spreading positivity or generally being positive towards others is very easy to do and can have more of an effect on someone than you may think. So why not, right? ?
